When the music stopped, many of the traditionally best-recalled advertisers had changed places in the monthly adWatch survey, but the names remained the same.

Coca-Cola moved up from second place into the top position in August, the first time its advertising has registered the best top-of-mind recall since the June 1988 survey.

Pepsi-Cola, which had held the top spot for the previous five months, fell to fifth.

Procter & Gamble Co.'s Tide rejoined the top 10, in the No. 9 slot, after finishing out of the money the previous month.

And a few advertisers that made surprise appearances among the top 10 earlier in the summer dropped from the list. AT&T Co., for example, No. 9 in July on the strength of its new campaign, didn't make it in August.

Neither did Sears, Roebuck & Co., seventh in June.

August just isn't a big month for splashy new campaigns that catch the attention of viewers, listeners and readers.

But there was at least one highly touted new campaign. And it was noticed.

Nike's "Just do it" TV spot featuring football and baseball star Bo Jackson playing hockey, tennis, basketball and electric guitar (with rock 'n' roll legend Bo Diddley) is one of the summer's most talked-about ads.

It didn't propel Nike into its first appearance among the top 10, but it came as close as an advertiser can—No. 11.

General Motors Corp. managed to turn a rare double play, placing not only ads for Chevrolet in the No. 6 spot but also corporate ads at No. 8.

Overall, August was just marking time until the fall, when a flood of new advertising traditionally does battle for the top of consumers' minds and things really get interesting.

AdWatch is a joint project of Advertising Age and the Gallup Organization. Ad awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample of adults to name the first advertiser that comes to mind, overall and in several categories, from among all ads seen, heard or read in the previous 30 days.

Last month, 1,000 adults were polled by phone. The margin of error is plus or minus 3.1%.

Among other changes of interest in the August survey:

- Advertisers have been playing "Can you top this?" with discounts in the fast-food category, but overall recall in the category was down last month.

McDonald's Corp., playing its "Blast Back With Mac" game, remained No. 1, of course, but its share of first mentions dipped slightly to 44.9% from 45.5%. No. 2 Wendy's International slipped to 12.7% from a 13.5% share in July.

No. 3 Burger King Corp. saw the biggest slide, dropping to 9.9% of first mentions from 12.1%.

Worth noting is the performance of Hardee's Food Systems, No. 4 overall with a 6.1% share in August. Hardee's has a strong store and advertising presence in the Southeast and Midwest but is weak in the Northeast and invisible in the West.

If recall of its advertising in its two strong regions were consistent nationally, Hardee's would have finished ahead of Burger King and only slightly behind Wendy's.

- Apple Computer suffered a 5.7-point decline in recall in the computer category, falling to a 27.2% share of first mentions, but remained ahead of No. 2 IBM Corp. (20%) and No. 3 Radio Shack (3.3%).
- Michelin Tire Corp. had picked up 4.9 share points in July but lost them again in the August survey. With a 14.8% share last month, it ranked second in the tire category, behind Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (26.5%). Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. remained No. 3 with 8%. □

Group to boycott doll

TUPELO, Miss.—The American Family Association is organizing a boycott of both Matchbox Toys (USA) and stores that sell a new doll based on the steel-clawed Freddy Krueger character from the "A Nightmare on Elm Street" films.

Matchbox is planning to have the $24.99, 17-inch doll on shelves by Halloween (AA, Aug. 28). □

Cereal market up, No. 1 Kellogg down

By John C. Maxwell Jr.

Despite the market share problems Kellogg Co. is facing, the cold-cereal industry as a whole is looking forward to a strong 1989.

The industry's total volume is expected to rise between 4.5% and 5% to about 2.6 billion pounds; dollar sales are likely to grow 14% to $6.7 billion.

Last year, volume rose 4.5% to 2.47 billion pounds, and dollar sales climbed 11% to about $5.9 billion. Significant price hikes for breakfast cereal ingredients accounted, in part, for the substantial dollar increases.

Leader Kellogg saw market share slip last year to 41% from 42.25% in tonnage and to 40.9% from 42% in dollars. High-volume products such as Frosted Flakes, Corn Flakes and Rice Krispies were down in sales as people moved to what they consider healthier brands.

Such "healthy" Kellogg brands as Mueslix and Nutrific did very well, with both these relatively new brands capturing more than a 1% market share.

In addition, Common Sense Oat Bran, with a 0.3% share in 1988, had a 2% market share in the first quarter of 1989.

General Mills gained 0.5 percentage points in tonnage market share due in part to the strength of Honey Nut Cheerios, Total and several of its newer products. These new entries, such as Benefit, should help the company end its fiscal year with record share. So far in 1989, General Mills has about 23% of the cold-cereal market.

General Foods USA's overall share continued to erode (to 11.9%), partly due to the decline of some of its leading brands, including Grape-Nuts and Post Raisin Bran.

However, one of its newly reintroduced products, Fortified Oat Flakes, is proving to be a strong performer, capturing a 0.6% market share in the first quarter of 1989.

Quaker Oats Co.'s top brands, Cap'n Crunch, Life and 100% Natural, increased in share last year. And the new Quaker Oat Squares continues to grow, with a 1.2% share in the first quarter of this year.

But other products, including Life, are now showing declines.

The company's performance in 1988 showed lower dollar share than tonnage share. That's because Quaker didn't pass on two price increases to consumers and because of its aggressiveness with "buy one, get one free" promotions.

Both Ralston Purina Co. and Nabisco Brands basically maintained their market shares in 1988. Their leading brands lost share, but new-product entries helped offset the loss.

One new Ralston product, Muesli, is performing well this year with about a 0.5% share.

The "All Other" category increased 1.3 share points to 6.7% last year, due in large part to private labels cashing in on the oat bran craze. This category will likely decline to the 4%-to-5% level it held in the mid-1980s. □

S&A takes restaurant taste to supermarkets

By Christy Fisher

S&A Restaurant Corp., parent of the Steak & Ale and Bennigan's chains, is expanding into supermarkets.

The chain is taking some of its popular restaurant sauces and dressings and packaging them for national grocery sale, targeting markets where it has a concentration of restaurants.

S&A quietly introduced Steak & Ale steak sauce and Bennigan's barbecue sauce into six markets last January and is now working to get distribution for its Steak & Ale steak and chicken marinade, as well as Steak & Ale salad dressings, in honey mustard, island spice and blue cheese.

Radio, print and outdoor ads for the steak and barbecue sauces broke Aug. 28 in Dallas, Houston, Minneapolis and Jacksonville, Orlando and Tampa, Fla. A free standing insert drops Oct. 22.

Hall, Northway & Scofield, Dallas, handles.

S&A hopes that by moving into the retail market, it can build sales and expand awareness of its 387 restaurants, said Janet Smith, manager of special projects.

Advertising is themed "Just tell them you know the chef at Steak & Ale [or Bennigan's]" to tie the products to the restaurants.

Chris Wolf, editor of Noble Communications Co.'s The Food Channel, a foodservice newsletter, said "cross-pollination" between the foodservice and retail sectors is becoming more common. Retail marketers increasingly are promoting their products on restaurant menus while restaurant chains are creating specialty products to be sold at the grocery, he said.

"S&A Restaurant Corp. runs little risk of cannibalizing its restaurant sales [with the retail product] because the consumer mindset is different with each," he said. "If you want to eat dinner now, you go to a restaurant. But if you've got time and you want to save money, you wouldn't go out to a restaurant anyway."

S&A is developing other products, Ms. Smith said, but she declined to name them or say whether the company would expand its offerings outside of sauces and dressings. □

Now we are going to test . . . piggy-backing with magazines. So if you have a product, catalog or mail-order offer that's compatible with the audience of a magazine, you have some really good targeting. There are presently about 14 consumer magazines such as Better Homes & Garden, Life, Metropolitan Home and Popular Science that present some really good opportunities for our members to ride-along. The first one was out last August when Endless Vacation rode-along with Golf.

In addition to our tests, United Delivery Systems and some of our members have been doing things on their own. Quill Corp. [and others] have been developing their own knowledge and marketing information on how to use alternate delivery.

AA: When do you think you'll get beyond the test phase?

Mr. Gitlitz: We're calling it a test phase because we have so much to learn.

It's embryonic, but it's something we're committed to . . . we're in it for the long run.

AA: What has been the U.S. Postal Service's reaction?

Mr. Gitlitz: At one time our efforts were being totally ignored, but they're realizing [private delivery] is a threat now.

[The United States Postal Service is] starting to let their field people know about it, and that shows that they're taking it seriously. They are saying, "Look, it's not business as usual. There's something going on out here that we better pay attention to and if we don't do our job right, and we don't give people the service they want and the rates they want and operate efficiently, we are going to start losing some customers." And that is what's happening.

AA: What do you think about Postmaster General Frank's program to bar code mailings?

Mr. Gitlitz: His plans for bar coding—where almost everything is going to be bar coded by 1994-95—should cut costs. We're hoping that all the attempts at automation will produce productivity gains.

They have spent a lot of money on automation and, according to the studies by the Postal Rate Commission, there have been very little, if any, productivity gains that can be identified.

Imports roll over Detroit

By Ed Fitch

When American Honda Motor Co.'s first Hispanic effort—sponsorship of Mexico City's Ballet Folklorico's U.S. tour—kicked off this month, it followed in the footsteps of other Japanese automakers in aggressively pursuing Hispanic sales.

As a result, the Japanese imports are dancing all over Detroit in chasing the Hispanic car buyer.

According to R.L. Polk & Co. data on 1988 model year purchases, the leading two brands among Hispanics in the compact and subcompact categories are Japanese.

Not coincidentally, said Raul Torano, Univision Network s senior VP-sales, the Japanese automakers are bigger Hispanic market advertisers.

The domestic automakers are vacillating about whether to enter the market, continuing to question whether Hispanics can afford a $15,000 car, Mr. Torano said. He calls that question "one of the biggest myths in the market."

"I don't know why Detroit believes that," Mr. Torano said. "They have the same data as the imports."

In the 24 Polk-surveyed U.S. markets, Hispanic vehicle purchases climbed 9% while non-Hispanic purchases dropped 2%; the average cost of a 1988 model was $14,100.

Among domestic automakers, Chevrolet is becoming more aggressive, Mr. Torano said. Meanwhile, Chrysler Corp. plans to break a campaign next month via Montemayor & Asociados, San Antonio.

But the domestics' efforts will be met by new creative from Conill Advertising for Toyota Motor Sales next month and continuing spot activity by Nissan Motor via Casanova, Pendrill Publicidad. Mazda Motors of America is expected to enter the market in 1990.

Honda already has big plans to increase its activity. Specializing in fancy footwork, the company is expected to move from Ballet Folklorico to a more than $1 million sponsorship of the 1990 World Cup soccer tournament. La Agencia de Orci & Asociados handles. □

MEDIA MOVES

National ambitions: El Nuevo Herald Publisher Roberto Suarez says taking the Miami Herald free-distribution supplement national has become a constant topic of discussion.

El Nuevo's success has introduced a lot of questions, he says. One relates to independence from the Herald and another concerns expansion. "There are certain U.S. markets that are very appropriate for a Spanish-language newspaper."

Some papers in those markets have their own ideas.

El Diario/La Prensa, New York's leading Spanish-language newspaper—recently sold to management by Gannett Co.—is investigating East Coast expansion.

Nuestro Tiempo, the Los Angeles Times free-distribution, Spanish-language insert, is moving from twice-monthly to weekly next March and has set its sites on becoming a daily, said Retail Advertising Coordinator Joe Coveto.

If Knight-Ridder takes El Nuevo national, "it will wake up a sleeping giant at Diario las Americas," El Nuevo's Miami competitor, said Strategy Research Corp. President Dick Tobin.

Diario's Advertising Director Miguel Suarez, Roberto's brother, admits there is room for growth. Brother Roberto concedes that if El Nuevo goes national, Diario las Americas most likely will be right behind them.

A suave move: Pending approval, Miami's WSUA-AM, "Radio Suave," will be sold to North Miami Broadcasting for an undisclosed price, said WSUA owner Herb Levin. "WSUA will serve the specialty Hispanic audience," concentrating on South Florida's growing Nicaraguan, Colombian and Argentine communities, he said.

Kent plans don't include BBDO

By Judann Dagnoli and Gary Levin

NEW YORK—Lorillard's determination to revive its struggling Kent cigarettes has led to a split with BBDO Worldwide on the $10 million account.

The marketer is eyeing a restaging of the brand to a low-price or generic line, a strategy that BBDO strongly resisted, said Philip Dusenberry, ceo of the agency's office here.

"We had a basic difference of opinion on that and a myriad of other issues," Mr. Dusenberry said.

He said Lorillard discontinued ad support for Kent in August and said that in the past two years, out-of-home media placement in just four major markets "means that 75% of the country has not had the benefit of meaningful ad support."

Mr. Dusenberry said BBDO presented seven Kent campaigns in the past 12 weeks to Lorillard and would have been owed $350,000 in creative fees if the split hadn't occurred.

Sara Ridgway, VP-public relations at Lorillard, said Kent has "taken a hit" from low-price and generic cigarettes but said the split stemmed from "creative differences." She said there's been no decision to convert the brand, but didn't rule it out.

She said the company will re-evaluate creative and strategies for Kent.

Low-price cigarettes now account for 11.4% of the $34 billion market, and Lorillard is the lone holdout from that growing segment.

In seeking a new shop, the company said it would consider its other two agencies—Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising and Ally & Gargano—as well as unidentified others.

Saatchi, a Lorillard agency since 1980, handles True and Spring Lemon Lights. Ally has worked with the company since 1975 and now is the agency for Newport, Newport Stripes and Harley-Davidson cigarettes.

Should Lorillard trade its brand down to a low-price entry, it would be in good company.

Just this year, older established brands have been converted to price brands by Philip Morris USA (Alpine), Liggett Group (Chesterfield Lights) and Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. (Viceroy).

Lorillard has steadfastly refused to enter the segment, because "they feel they'll never make money on it," said Wheat First Securities analyst John C. Maxwell Jr.

But that attitude could change under the company's new chairman-ceo, Andrew Tisch.

Ms. Ridgway said Mr. Tisch, a former Lorillard brand manager, intends to have a hands-on approach to the business.

Mr. Tisch's family owns Lorillard through parent Loews Corp.

Kent has slowly but steadily lost share. Mr. Maxwell's figures show Kent had a 2.3% share in 1988 and inched up to 2.4% in the second quarter of 1989, ranking 13th in the U.S. □ advertising, and Quaker quickly countersued.

Healthy food

The Quaker/Texas battle may force national regulatory action if the proliferation of health claims alone doesn't.

"I feel there's massive confusion with all these health claims for food," said Phil Sokolof, president of the National Heart Savers Association, a consumer advocacy group. "You can't rely on these marketers' health claims."

If consumers are confused, marketers are frustrated.

"With the states jumping in, [food labeling] has become like playing baseball with 50 referees: It's hard to play competitively and on a level playing field," said George M. Burditt, an attorney specializing in food-labeling issues with Burditt, Bowles & Radzius, Chicago, one of the law firms handling the Quaker case. "In fact, it's hard to play at all."

While the Federal Trade Commission and Food & Drug Administration start anew the process of formulating guidelines for the labeling and marketing of food products, marketers are "operating in a vacuum of federal regulation," said Charles Mitchell, staff attorney with Center for Science in the Public Interest, a consumer advocacy group.

Into that void has stepped everyone from individual states to the American Heart Association.

"The food industry ought to do its best to convince the FDA that, given current views in this country on food and its importance to a healthy lifestyle, we ought to be able to communicate that to consumers," said Luther McKinney, senior VP-law and corporate affairs for Quaker. "If we prohibit health claims, we are condemning the public to ignorance, condemning competition and discouraging further research."

Trends in cereal sales indicate that, for their part, consumers support products that might help them be healthier.

While the cereal industry as a whole grew 14% to $7.2 billion, sales of oat or bran cereals (hot and cold) were up 35.6%, to $2.26 billion for the year ended July 14, said Arbitron/SAMI consultant Alan Miller. Oat or bran products now account for 31.4% of cereal sales.

The newer segment of cereals combining oats and bran, including Kellogg's Common Sense Oat Bran and Heartwise, Quaker Oat Bran and General Mills' Benefit, grew about 369% to $271.2 million from $57.9 million, Mr. Miller said.

"We know consumers are interested in this area—and because they are, we feel responsible to publish information on the effect of diet on health," said Alta Engstrom, General Mills' director of nutrition.

Even the FDA agrees.

"Consumers are demanding more information about the products they buy, and we [the FDA] haven't quite caught up with those expectations," said L. Robert Lake, director of the Office of Compliance at FDA's Center for Food Safety & Nutrition.

The FDA plans public hearings on food labeling and health claims in October and November, with next spring a target for completed guidelines.

"With the states jumping in, [food labeling] has become like playing baseball with 50 referees: It's hard to play competitively and on a level playing field."

That would be nearly a year after General Mills' Benefit first hit store shelves.

"Absolutely, the FDA has to get involved," said one food company president. "But with the way the FDA works, it will take an order practically from Bush himself" to get the guidelines out.

Some expect the FTC, with Bush administration commissioners coming on board, to take a more active role.

"For better or worse, the FTC clearly has jurisdiction over health claims in advertising, and the new commissioners will be more active in the health area," said David Versfelt, advertising attorney with Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, New York, and counsel to the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

"Just as the Supreme Court reads election returns, the FTC is not unmindful" of public pressure, he said.

The reality for at least the next few months, however, is action at the state level.

"It's going to be very hard to stop the states from . . . [acting on their interest in] protecting their citizens," said Steve Durschlag, an advertising law attorney with Winston & Strawn, Chicago.

Some marketers, however, suggest government officials could hurt consumers as much by holding back good health claims as by preventing bad ones.

"We do not as a company create the news," said former Kellogg President Horst Schroeder in an interview last month. "Scientists are saying finally that foods and diet are a key issue of the 1990s."

Mr. Schroeder resigned his post last week (see story on Page 6).

Said Quaker's Mr. McKinney: "If I were a politician, I would think long and hard before I tell my constituents I am going to ban messages that bring them the truth about products that can help their lifestyle."

Private industry is making a stab at self-regulation. In the past month, Kellogg and Quaker have outlined suggestions for internally monitoring proper and improper health claims.

"The recent concern about how to deliver a health message . . . is getting in the way," Kellogg Chairman-CEO William LaMothe said in announcing his company's health messages policy late last month.

But consumer groups question the selflessness of food marketers' interest in making health claims.

In addition to cereals, oils and margarines are at the center of the controversy over health-oriented marketing. And with frozen prepared meals called Healthy Choice from ConAgra Consumer Frozen Food Co. and Right Course from Stouffer Foods Corp. now moving into national distribution, frozen-foods marketers are just a step behind.

Others will jump in as not only new products but new ingredients are discovered. Procter & Gamble Co.'s olestra fat substitute, for example, is now awaiting FDA approval.

The bottom line in all this is to decide what information should be passed on to consumers and in what fashion. And as quickly as possible.

"This isn't that difficult to solve," Quaker's Mr. McKinney said. "We've advanced a lot in dietary options and the medical profession's perception of the relationship between diet and health. Now we need to resolve the relatively simple matter of communicating those ideas." □

Chrysler

ger determinant than ever of a product's design, Mr. Lutz said. For instance, the new Chrysler Imperial unabashedly is pointed at older buyers who like conservative styling.

For the 1990s, Chrysler brand is being positioned as a traditional American luxury marque; Dodge as affordable, youthful performance; Plymouth as a smart buy; Eagle as a sophisticated, import-like choice; and Jeep as the premium sport-utility line.

Chrysler's major sales successes during the 1980s have been with unique vehicles such as Jeep trucks, minivans and convertibles. More often, however, the company has been the K mart of the automotive world, offering discounted imitations of products developed by its bigger rivals, General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

With at least 40 brands battling for share of the U.S. market, Chrysler's derivative-looking products have gotten a lukewarm reception from the automotive press and the buying public.

Through August, Chrysler's 1989 car market share was 10.8%, compared with 11.9% during the same period in 1988, Automotive News reported. An increase in Jeep sales has enabled Chrysler to hold steady at 21% of the light-duty truck market.

The biggest hurdle facing the "anti-vanilla" movement may be time. It will take about four years to overhaul virtually the entire product lineup—and insiders are worried that Chrysler's current belt-tightening will take its toll.

Chrysler is committed to cutting operating costs by $1 billion within 15 months (AA, July 31). So far, no new-product programs have been delayed or abolished, but the company's product planners privately are concerned that cautious financial officers will try to put the brakes on risky programs.

Mr. Lutz said Chrysler hopes to achieve its $1 billion in savings without trimming anything that affects the customer or the product. Chrysler is asking its ad agencies, like other suppliers, to propose ways to save money. Those proposals are expected to center on such issues as media buying and production costs.

"We don't want to cut their margins; we just want to help them cut their costs," Mr. Lutz said. "There are no current plans to ask them to reduce fees or reduce margins."

Mr. Lutz also said there are no plans to trim media budgets. □ companies seeking to reward manufacturers' efforts to minimize environmental damage are endorsing a principle consumers have already embraced.

K mart, the No. 2 retailer, announced its program with a page ad in the Sept. 20 issue of USA Today that outlined its plans to work with and encourage manufacturers and suppliers to provide "environmentally compatible products."

Wal-Mart also ran a page newspaper ad when it disclosed its program (AA, Aug. 21).

K mart has been meeting with several marketers, including Procter & Gamble Co., to discuss ways of improving products. One early result is that starting Oct. 1, all K mart stores in Florida will use photodegradable shopping bags, a switch that eventually may be extended to all K mart stores.

K mart is also developing a consumer campaign to promote its involvement in environmental preservation and educate customers on ways they can become involved.

"We're still exploring a number of different options," said Michael Wellman, VP-marketing. "I see no reason why we, too, wouldn't tag" products that are more environmentally safe, as Wal-Mart does.

Ross Roy Inc., Bloomfield Hills, Mich., and sister agency Calet, Hirsch & Spector, New York, handle K mart advertising, though last week's ad in USA Today was produced in-house.

Wal-Mart is "pleased" that K mart "decided to join the initiative," said Brenda Lockhart, coordinator of public relations. She said one of the retailer's goals "was to encourage others to take a stand."

Wal-Mart said it has received "tremendous" response from consumers and vendors so far. Many vendors are making plans to change packaging or content of products, Ms. Lockhart said. □

Philip Morris ad spending muscles past $2 billion

Top 100 marketers tip ad scales at $32.2 billion as acquisitions and flood of retailers jumble rankings, and spot media and new product growth cool

Philip Morris Cos. became the first company to crack the $2 billion mark in annual advertising and promotional spending in the U.S. with an increase of 7.2% to $2.06 billion in 1988, according to the 34th annual Advertising Age 100 Leading National Advertisers' report.

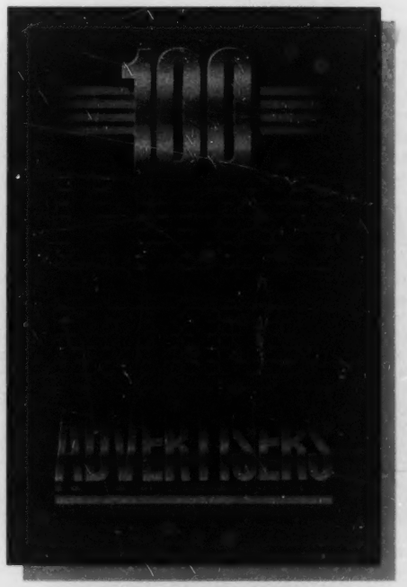
The company's mammoth Kraft General Foods division with combined sales of $22.5 billion accounted for about 60% of total Philip Morris advertising. About 25% of the ad budget was for cigarettes and 15% for the Miller beer unit. The Ad Age report folded into the company ad totals full-year spending for Kraft Inc., purchased for $13.1 billion in December 1988. Kraft, last year's 22nd largest U.S. advertiser, claimed close to half Philip Morris' ad expenditures for food.

Procter & Gamble, dominant ad spender until edged out of No. 1 by Philip Morris in last year's report, retained the No. 2 spot with ad spending of $1.51 billion, up only 2.8%. General Motors Corp., No. 3, remained in striking distance of P&G at $1.29 billion, a dramatic 34% increase over 1987, and Sears, Roebuck & Co. filled out the billion-dollar ad club at $1.05 billion, up 4.4%.

The leading four marketers together accounted for 18% of the Top 100's $32.21 billion aggregate, up 6.7% from 1987 totals recorded by these same companies. As a group, the Top 100 represented 27.3% of all advertising in the U.S. in 1988, down slightly from 27.5% in 1987. Total U.S. advertising in 1988 is estimated at $118.05 billion by Robert J. Coen, McCann-Erickson U.S.

The price of admission to the Top 100 this year climbed steeply to $108 million in advertising, the level recorded by No. 100, Subaru of America, a new entry to the chart. Last year, No. 100 was Ameritech at $83.4 million.

National media ad spending accounted for $17.98 billion, or 55.7% of the Top 100 total volume. The remainder was "unmeasured" advertising and promotion not monitored by national tracking services (See Methodology, Page 2), such as all forms of direct marketing and promotions.



Cover design: AVID PRODUCTIONS/CHICAGO

Acquisitions, as evidenced by ad expansion at Philip Morris (PM's ad total was $1.56 billion without Kraft in 1987), heavily influenced rankings within the Top 100 in 1988. Grand Metropolitan PLC soared to No. 6 from No. 40 based on its buyout of last year's No. 19, Pillsbury Co. SmithKline Beecham checked in at No. 39, up from Beecham Group PLC's rank of 54 last year. A merged Bristol-Myers Squibb reached No. 21. Squibb Corp., not a major consumer advertiser, contributed enough to help lift Bristol-Myers from No. 26 a year ago. Buyout activity continued this fall with P&G's planned $1.3 billion purchase of No. 79 Noxell Corp.; No. 53 Adolph Coors Co.'s buyout for $425 million of Strohs Brewery Co., and No. 81 Sony Corp.'s offer to purchase Columbia Pictures Entertainment, No. 85.

Retailers shot into the Top 100 en masse because newspapers, their main ad medium, are now a measured medium. Ad Age historically picks its 100 companies on the basis of their measured media expenditures. (See Methodology, Page 2), but re-ranks them by their total ad expenditures, which includes our subsequent estimates of unmeasured spending. Twelve retailers reached the Top 100 up from five in 1987.

Network TV continued to dominate spending totals. The 100 increased their network expenditures 7.5% to $6.99 billion. They remain the networks' lifeblood, contributing 72.9% of the medium's total in 1988, down slightly from 73.7% in 1987. The medium accounted for 21.7% of all measured media expenditures for the Top 100 in 1988, up from 21.5%. General Motors' overall ad increase of 34% went largely into network TV and it wrested the top spot from P&G.

GM spent $443.4 million, up 62.4%, compared to Philip Morris's $388.6 million, an increase of 3.2%, while last year's network leader, P&G, fell to third, at $370.2 million, down 2%.

There was a slight erosion in spending on spot TV, the 100's second medium of choice, as total spending reached $3.45 billion, off 0.8%. As a result, spot TV accounted for 10.7% of the measured total for the Top 100, down from 11.5%. The Top 100 accounted for 40.1% of spending by all advertisers on spot TV in 1988, down from 41.4% in 1987. PepsiCo, ninth largest spender among the 100, retained its lead in the spot TV medium although its spending dipped 4.8% to $258 million.

Spot TV, the only measured medium where totals dipped for the Top 100 in 1988, was affected by the renewed strength of network and increased buying in syndicated TV—both diverting dollars from spot.

Magazine spending by the 100 rose 10% to $2.60 billion as the group boosted its share of total national magazine advertising to 44.1% from 43.8% in 1987. Magazines accounted for 8.1% of all measured media of the leaders, up from 7.8%. Philip Morris retained its title as top advertiser in magazines with a tobacco-heavy expenditure of $270.3 million, down 0.3%, far outdistancing General Motors Corp. at $190.8 million, up 24%.

Spending in newspapers reached $2.35 billion for the Top 100, up 9.1% from the prior year. Newspapers took 7.3% of the total measured media pie of the Top 100, up from 7.1% in 1987. Newspapers are a retailer's medium and five retailers from the Top 100, led by No. 26 May Department Stores, took the top five spots among all advertisers in the medium.

Measured media ad spending returns for the first half of 1989 show the Top 100 probably is not priming the ad pump. Total for the period for all advertisers was $18.3 billion, up 5.2% from the comparable period in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron, which monitors nine media. This compares with the 1988 mid-year increase of 15.7% over mid-year 1987.

The figures, however, seem to demonstrate a renewed emphasis in more localized media. Spot TV returned to the growth column, up 5.2% to $4.24 billion, as network TV dropped to $4.68 billion, down 1.2%, according to LNA/Arbitron, which also reported newspapers up 2.7% to $4.16 billion and magazines up 13.3% to $3.18 billion. Spot radio, monitored separately by Radio Expenditure Reports, improved 17.3% to $850.3 million.

The increase in spot radio and TV is affected by the retailing category's virtual blanket emphasis on every day low prices, a message of immediacy if there ever was one, and possibly new product launches, which would mark a reversal in new product trends. The market experienced lackluster growth in new products in 1988 as new entries built the market total 3.7% to 10,558, compared with a 26.6% increase in 1987 over the prior year, according to New Product News. That growth represented only 376 new products, compared with 2,141 intros in the prior year.

There was very little new category development, too, as most new products were new or enhanced versions of existing brands. For example, RJR Nabisco, No. 5, introduced "new" products bearing such franchised brand names as Oreos and Honey Graham Crackers.

Less-oily light salty snacks like PepsiCo's Ruffles Light from Frito-Lay, upscale pet foods from Grand Met's Alpo, No. 15 Nestle S.A.'s Carnation and No. 24 Ralston Purina, fresh refrigerated food lines like Philip Morris' Chillery line from Kraft and anything NutraSweet were in, as were the calorie-packed products health conscious consumers reward themselves with for being good most of the time—No. 30 Mars Inc.'s new Snickers and 3 Musketeers ice cream bars.

Then, of course, whether breads, crackers, cereals, potato or tortilla chips, pasta, pretzels or flavored flakes in a shaker, new products in 1988 could be summed up in two words: "Oat bran," says Lynn Dornblaser, NPN editor. This fed the population's concern about cholesterol levels.

Marketers also expanded their non-media advertising, from outlays for instore promotions and pricing in toiletries and beauty aids to incentive rebates by car manufacturers to move inventory. Such expenditures grew 5.8% to $14.2 billion for the Top 100.

Special event marketing captured the fancy of the Top 100 characterized by No. 28 Coca-Cola's giveaway of 20 million pairs of 3-D glasses to enable Super Bowl telecast viewers to see in vivid 3-D Coke's 45-second commercial. Walt Disney Co., No. 34, staged the 60th anniversary of Mickey Mouse, spending an estimated $100 million in promotional dollars.

Hershey Foods Corp. handed out 750,000 full-sized candy bars on 170 college campuses for sampling. Such blanket marketing programs pushed Hershey's worldwide promo budget up 34.5% as it rose from No. 69 to No. 35 in 1988.

Cross-ties influenced the heavy promotional, or non-media spending, because of licensing fees and other non-media costs. Disney repeatedly was on the receiving end as the Top 100 tied-in with its various movies and cartoon characters.

Mars' M&M/Mars division shifted media dollars to promotion in 1988 and this year, including an upcoming tie-in with Disney's video release of "Bambi." Disney's "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" was linked to in-store promos with No. 8 McDonald's Corp. and No. 65 MCA Inc.'s Universal Pictures' "E.T." starred in PepsiCo spots. To promote the network's new prime-time fall schedule, K mart, No. 12, linked with CBS in a sweepstakes promotion, and Sears did the same with NBC.

Ralston Purina launched its Dunkin Donuts cereal, and Grand Met struck a licensing agreement to use the Garfield cartoon character for its $70 million campaign launching Alpo brand cat food this November.

Retailing became so competitive and me-tooish that K mart; Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward & Co., No. 64, each now promote every day low prices. Federated and Allied stores tried to adjust to their takeover by Campeau Corp., No. 41, but cash flow problems late this year led Campeau to seek a buyer for Bloomingdale's. Parent of Saks Fifth Avenue and Marshall Field & Co., B.A.T. Industries, No. 54, continues to resist a takeover by Sir James Goldsmith, with the possible outcome a forced sale of Field's or Saks.

Stiff competition and large inventories saw auto marketers adopt massive profit-reducing incentives to move cars out of showrooms. Ford Motor, No. 16, lost an average $900 a vehicle through rebate schemes. Subaru of America's incentives ranging from $1,000 to $3,000 per vehicle cost the company nearly $100 million. Incentive promotions helped boost car advertising volume in the U.S. by an average 12.8%, while their U.S. sales advanced only 0.3% on average.

Advertisers continued to find ways to cut costs while seeking to build strong brand franchises. A number of the Top 100 linked product performance to agency compensation. Nestle's Carnation even tied agency fees to ad performance of products in test.

Methodology & sources

Improvements in monitoring services' methodology, partially the result of mergers, added several twists in the data compilation for this year's issue.

First, retail advertising in newspapers is being measured in almost 50 major U.S. markets. In previous issues newspaper retail advertising was not measured at all, but for national retailers was included in unmeasured figures.

Also, a new and growing medium—syndicated TV—was added to the list. In previous years, syndicated buys were included in either spot TV or unmeasured figures.

Selection process

The 100 leaders are selected on their measured ad spending only—that's ad expenditures in national consumer media that are monitored by various services (see below). AA reporters and free-lance writers then research company spending trends and estimate the amount each company spends on unmeasured advertising—couponing, direct mail, catalogues, sales promotion, etc.

The ranking is based on the total of measured and unmeasured ad spending.

Media monitoring services

LNA/Arbitron Multi-Media Service reports supply most of the measured media information in this report. The service consists of two separate companies (Leading National Advertisers and Arbitron's Broadcast Advertisers Reports) that join forces to provide ad spending in nine media by company, brand and category.

Publishers Information Bureau (part of LNA) supplies magazine and newspaper Sunday supplement data. Media Records (recently purchased by LNA) provides newspaper spending. Outdoor Advertising Association of America and Institute of Outdoor Advertisers supply outdoor spending, through LNA. Network TV, spot TV, nationally syndicated TV, cable TV networks and network radio are monitored by Broadcast Advertisers Reports, now a subsidiary of Arbitron Ratings Co.

Radio Expenditure Reports compiles spot radio data by company, brand and category. Farm publication spending is monitored by Agricultural Marketing Information Services (AGRICOM).

Because several sources compile ad spending data, some categories do not match. In the table on Page 8, category totals are matched as closely as possible to PIB classifications given by LNA.

Unmeasured spending

Unmeasured advertising figures are Ad Age estimates and include direct mail, promotion, co-op, couponing, catalogues and special events, to name a few. Annual Reports, Form 10-Ks, corporate sources and Ad Age beat reporters provide assistance in computing this number. Unmeasured advertising DOES NOT include corporate overhead, overseas ad spending or local advertising.

Sales & earnings

Worldwide, domestic and division sales and earnings are taken from public documents, wherever possible. Where companies will not divulge this information and a reliable estimate is not available, an "NA" is used. Foreign currencies are converted at the rates given in each company's annual report.

Corporate composition

Folded into parent company totals for both 1988 and 1987 is 100% of the ad spending of companies they either acquired or reached an agreement to acquire as of Aug. 1, 1989. A company's divisional makeup and advertised brands are shown in its marketing structure breakdown at the end of its profile.

U.S. Government figures

Ad spending figures for the U.S. Government are compiled from ad agencies of the federal government, rather than sources listed above.

American Brands, with its cash-rich tobacco holdings among an assortment of businesses, continues to draw unwanted suitors, the latest being the Liggett Group. Unilever NV is believed to be standing in the wings.

The company remains heavy in debt, however, after spending $2.1 billion in 1988 to buy out E-II Holdings. American Brands bought E-II using the so-called Pac-Man defense in consuming the raider.

American Brands media advertising remained flat in 1988 even with the addition of the home products and office supplies units that comprised E-II. These operations seldom advertised much anyway. They included Waterloo Industries, Day-Timers, Vogel Peterson, Master Lock Co. and AristoKraft among others.

Little changed in the concentration of American Brands' advertising as 82% of its media budget went for tobacco and liquor advertising in 1988, compared to 74% in the prior year.

However, the focus of advertising shifted to American Tobacco Co. (accounting for nearly 13% of AB sales worldwide) as its media spending increased 64% to $47 million, compared to distilled spirits' 59% drop to $15 million.

The drop in distilled spirits advertising, a budget commanded by AB's Jim Beam Brands Co. (6% of all sales), came despite acquisition in May 1987 of the distilled spirits division of National Distillers & Chemical Corp.

Despite the absence for the second straight year of Pall Mall, the company's star performer, from U.S. tobacco industry's Top 10 cigarettes, AB maintained a 6.9% market share in 1988 and 1987, according to analyst John C. Maxwell Jr. of Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va. Media spending for Pall Mall dropped 22.4% to $9.9 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Carlton cigarettes dominated tobacco spending with $22.6 million, up 58% as America Brands spending on the Carlton filter line jumped from $7.8 million in 1987 to $22 million in 1988. Carlton filter's market share didn't budge from 1.7% although unit sales of the brand declined 1.2%.

Malibu, a low-price brand, saw its spending grow tenfold to $12.2 million in 1988 from only $1.2 million. Pall Mall Red and Lucky Strike Regular continued to dominate the non-filter category with a combined 56% share, the company said. Tareyton maintained its position as the leading charcoal filter cigarette with a 56% market share.

Jim Beam Brands held its place as third-largest U.S. distilled spirits company and seventh-largest worldwide. Its Jim Beam Bourbon, Windsor Canadian Supreme, Gilbey's gin, Gilbey's vodka and Kamchatka vodka and its DeKuyper family of cordials and liqueurs are among the 30 top-selling domestic labels, according to the company.

American Cyanamid held the line on media spending for most product lines in 1988, yet its popular brands in the men's fragrance and insect control markets gained share points.

The company's big Shulton consumer group, however, stepped up ad spending for Old Spice products to $14.8 million, up 16.5%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Old Spice aftershave and cologne's share of the men's fragrance market rose to 19.5% from 19% in 1987, while competitor Mennen Skin Bracer came in at 14.1% in 1988.

Old Spice maintained its 6.6% fourth-place share in the U.S. deodorant market. Market leader was Mennen's, whose share rose to 11.8% from 11.7%, followed by Procter & Gamble's Secret at 10.9% from 11%, and Gillette's Right Guard, which jumped to 8.3% from 6.9%.

Old Spice Liquid Stick, with porous dome designed to prevent residue, was launched in midsummer 1988 supported by $9 million in advertising. The deodorant has gained only 0.5% of the market.

Santa Fe, a cologne and aftershave introduced in November, 1988, as a "mass prestige line," adds a stick deodorant this fall. American Cyanamid backed Santa Fe with $3.7 million in measured spending for the two months in 1988.

Early results from the March 1989 introduction of men's haircare line Thrive were disappointing, said James Daniel, an analyst who follows American Cyanamid for Brown Brothers Harriman & Co., New York. American Cyanamid is still holding to its plans to spend $12 million to advertise the product through this year.

Shulton feels Thrive is being denied shelf space because retailers mistakenly considered it in the same category with Rogaine, an Upjohn prescription product for encouraging actual hair growth, Mr. Daniel said.

The Thrive line includes the supplement used before blowdrying, plus a shampoo and hairspray. Competitors are Revlon's Nutrasome, a supplement and shampoo, and Upjohn's shampoo Progaine, also introduced in early 1989.

Combat, which got an estimated $5.6 million in advertising in 1988, down 13.8%, this year added a flea and roach fogger and aerosol sprays for ants and roaches and flying insects. Combat climbed to a 14% share, from 12%, in the household pesticide market. The company estimates Combat's strong sales in 1989 have elevated its market share another two points.

Raid (S.C. Johnson & Son) continues to dominate the market, however, with 49% of the market compared to 53% in 1987, although Shulton sources believe Raid has built back three share points already this year. Black Flag, which Combat nudged out of second place in 1988, took about 14% of the market in both 1987 and 1988, and about 13% so far this year.

Pine-Sol, which began advertising its reformulation in February 1989, continues to lead the all-purpose liquid cleaners category. It dipped to 12% in 1988 from 12.5%, but by this July, was registering about a 13% share, said K.M. Freeman, VP-general manager for household products. LNA/Arbitron estimates 1988 ad spending at $9.5 million.

A line extension, Pine-Sol Spruce-Ups, disposable moist wipe cleaners, begins shipping in October and will be backed beginning in December with a $7 million one-year TV and print campaign.

Introduced two years ago, FiberCon lags behind bulk laxative leader Metamucil, but continues to gain market share. FiberCon's first quarter growth in manufacturer's dollar sales hit 30%, and the product is believed to be neck-in-neck with Dow Chemical's Citrucel for the No. 2 spot. In March of this year, FiberCon's share was estimated at 7%, up from 5.8% at the same period a year earlier. Citrucel was 7%, up from 6.4% and Metamucil was 52%, from 51.7%.

Centrum vitamins, reformulated to include beta carotene, were backed by an estimated $7.9 million in ad spending in 1988.

American Express, which long has cultivated its prestige image in advertising, is starting to go a tad downscale.

As the 30-year-old AmEx credit card battles to increase usage, tests are under way to accept the card at fast-food chains, discount stores and movie theaters. Currently, about 2.5 million merchants are signed up with AmEx compared with 6.5 million for Visa.

The AmEx strategy for the 1990s is to cultivate a dozen marketing segments, including colleges, small businesses, women and seniors.

Several industry analysts are less than enthusiastic about AmEx's prospects. Spencer Nilson, publisher of the "Nilson Report," a credit-card industry newsletter, believes AmEx will lose about one-third of its 22 million cardmember base by 1995. Other analysts also agree that lower fee bank cards will take an increasingly larger share of the premium card market.

In the hot gold card market, Visa Gold has 12.2 million card members with Gold MasterCard second at 11 million. American Express has 6 million, although it has always boasted that its customers carry higher incomes. However, the income gap between the average household of American Express' cardmember base and that of its bank competitors has narrowed. The average household income of American Express' cardmember is $48,175 compared with $43,250 for bank cardholders.

AmEx's gold card focus now is more pedestrian as it seeks growth through baby boomers via advertising from new agency Chiat/Day/Mojo, New York.

New campaigns have shifted from the exotic locations and luxurious dining settings of the past to healthcare and family dining.

American Express also is looking at an audience where money is an object. AmEx is testing in the Chicago area an "Express Weekend" program for travelers who want to take advantage of last-minute air fare, hotel or car rental discounts on short notice.

American Express also is joining with travel/entertainment marketers in co-op programs. As part of a year-long joint program with Hilton Hotels, extra points were awarded hotel guests who charged their stays on American Express.

AmEx has increased significantly its spending on travelers checks under a new program which hand delivers refunds anywhere in the world at no charge by simply making a phone call. The ad campaign, at $32 million, is up 60%.

Although American Express has been the target of both Visa and MasterCard in the gold card wars, the AmEx travelers checks campaign was the company's first slap at the banks. "If your bank doesn't sell them, go to one that does," the spots urge.

The company, meanwhile, has taken its billing process high tech, offering not only a consumer benefit, but one with great marketing potential. AmEx can track charge slips to identify cardholders as frequent travelers to a particular region, enthusiasts of a certain hobby or sport or even type of restaurant.

American Home Products Corp., a major competitor in the red hot analgesics marketing wars, continues to shuffle its advertising agencies.

Most recently, AHP yanked $40 million of business from its long-time agency of record, Campbell-Mithun-Esty, New York, after balking at the agency's new style. A year earlier, a battery of products was taken from N W Ayer and Saatchi & Saatchi and scattered among other agencies, with McCann-Erickson gaining most.

The $25.7 million Anacin business at CME was turned over to Young & Rubicam, New York, which also handles Advil. Marketed under AHP's Whitehall Laboratories, Anacin holds a 7% share in the $2.4 billion pain relief arena led by Johnson & Johnson's Tylenol.

Within the aspirin segment, Anacin produces 16% of sales. Aspirins account for 40% of all pain relief sales while acetaminophens produce another 40%. Fledgling ibuprofens account for 20%, according to Nielsen Marketing Research, which says ibuprofen sales increased 14% last year while the other segments posted declines.

Whitehall's acetaminophen entry, Anacin-3, also was turned over to a new agency, Partners & Shevack, which is in charge of the $13.6 million account since acquiring Kornhauser & Calene.

Whitehall has been pleased with Y&R's efforts to keep Advil the leading ibuprofen. It was the first to enter the market in 1984 and has held an impressive 64% of the business ever since. Bristol-Myers' Nuprin is second with a 22% share, according to Charles Kline & Associate figures; J&J's Medipren has about 13%.

Measured spending for Advil totaled $47.5 million in 1988, down 1.9%. Industry sources expect Whitehall will rev up spending in 1989 to stave off competition from B-M's Nuprin and Upjohn's newly released Motrin IB. B-M executives have stated they want to make Nuprin the No. 1 brand and will spend $31 million to do so. Upjohn has earmarked $30 million for Motrin, to be spent in just the second half of the year.

Retailers said Whitehall plans to capitalize on its strong Advil franchise with a Co-Advil cold product. Whitehall already has a strong entry in the cold, allergy and sinus classification with Dristan. Two new Dristan items debuted last year, Maximum Strength Dristan Caplets with a no-drowsiness formula and long-lasting and regular formulations of Dristan Nasal Spray. Total Dristan spending was $17.6 million, up 14.3% from 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Other products falling under the Whitehall umbrella are Primatene, Denorex shampoo, Riopan, Anbesol, Preparation H, Clearblue pregnancy tests and the Today Sponge, which was acquired in 1987 and was extended with a Today condom.

AHP's Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories' Triphasil remained the second-most frequently prescribed low-dose triphasic oral contraceptive with a 37% share, behind J&J's Ortho. W-A's Premarin remains a market leader in estrogen replacement, although the entire category is undergoing health scrutiny.

W-A's jewel, Phenergan, was poised to make the jump from ethical to OTC in 1989. However, the non-narcotic versions of the product—the No. 1 prescribed cough remedy for over 30 years—hit snags with the FDA. Trade ads announced the launch before Wyeth found out the product would not be rolled out in July as planned. When it does make it to retailers' shelves, Phenergan should be a big player in the $1.9 billion market. A $10 million ad budget is in reserve for the debut.

AHP's food division, leader in the $500 million prepared pasta market, was strengthened by the national introduction of Chef Boyardee Microwave Meals. Chef Boyardee's line of canned pastas was expanded by the addition of two varieties of Dinosaur Pastas. All canned pastas were backed with almost $9 million in measured media spending in 1988. Chef Boyardee, which celebrated its 50th anniversary, spent $18.4 million in measured media, up 27%.

The cholesterol concern sweeping the country fueled sales of sodium- and cholesterol-free Pam cooking spray. Measured spending amounted to $9.3 million, down 6.1%.

Under the aegis of American Home Food Products, Wheatena and Maypo were acquired in 1988, giving American Home an entry into the $600 million hot cereal market.

Last year, AHP agreed to purchase A.H. Robins Co. for $700 million in AHP stock and a payment of $2.3 billion into a trust fund to be created to settle claims by users of the Robins, Dalkon Shield. The merger cannot be completed, however, until appeals filed against the plan are resolved.

The Old Gray Trade Magazine Ain't What It Used to be.

Remember when your father was a young man and used to come home with an armful of trade magazines, to catch up on his impor-tant reading? You probably wondered what he could find interesting in such dull, drab publications. Just page after page of small type. Hardly any photos or illustrations. And no color.

Well, times have certainly changed. The old gray trade magazine ain't what it used to be. At least not Cahners magazines. Our magazines are well written, well designed, and printed by the most advanced printing methods. And they are anything but gray. Over 80% of all pages in Cahners Network magazines... both editorial pages and advertising pages ...are printed in color.

Isn't it time you took another look at trade magazines, especially Cahners magazines? For creativity, eye appeal, readability, and color, they are easily the match of the most popular and widely read consumer magazines.

That's why so many advertisers are using Cahners magazines to sell their products to business firms, and to the executives and managers who run these firms.

American Stores Co., enjoined at least temporarily in California from combining its Alpha Beta Stores supermarkets with newly-acquired Lucky Stores, reorganized operations into a centralized structure and moved headquarters back to Salt Lake City after a year in Irvine, Calif.

American Stores in 1988 purchased for $2.5 billion Lucky's 347 stores in California and Nevada and sought to consolidate them into the 220-store Alpha Beta operations. But the California attorney general blocked the move, arguing that operations must remain separate to not undermine competition. Last month, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor granted the request to halt the merger until the full Court could consider the state's antitrust claims, possibly this October.

American's buyout of Lucky gives the combination a 26% share of the retail food market in California, placing it just ahead of Safeway, whose acquisition in 1988 of Von's pushed its share to about 26%. Campeau Corp.'s Ralph's has 13%.

efits which American Stores could use. In 1988, earnings fell 37% due largely to costs associated with the acquisition. Company officials also plan to marry the two similar marketing themes: Lucky pushes a "Low Price Leader" image; Alpha Beta stresses variety as well as price.

American Stores inherits a large ad budget with Lucky, whose $38.4 million in measured spending in 1988, up 33%, doubled the $19 million spent by Americans' Jewel Food Stores (down 20%), according to LNA/Arbitron. Drawing $10 million each were Acme Food Stores, down 9% from the prior year and Alpha Beta, down 16%.

During 1989, American Stores veered from a two-year planned decentralization to a "holding company strategy" that concentrates management and resources at its Salt Lake City headquarters. In 1987 the company had relocated to Irvine and talked of spinning off one or more of its subsidiaries into autonomous, publicly-held companies. Such structural changes are common at American Stores, which has had to alter regional definitions and cost-center locations in the past to integrate buyouts into its corporate structure, according to analysts.

Regardless of its new bent toward centralization, the company remained structured mostly along regional lines. The largest of five operating units remains American Superstores, a holding for Acme Markets, Jewel Food Stores, Star Market and Jewel Osco. Marketing and advertising are handled individually by each subsidiary.

American Drug Stores, which changed its name from Osco Drug in December 1988, continues to operate under the Osco Drug name except in California and Nevada, where it reverted to the old Sav-on moniker after two years as Osco because of better name recognition. American Drug plans to enter the growing field of mail-order prescription sales in 1990, under the banner "Rx America."

Sales at Lucky Stores increased 9%, up to $5.42 billion for the full year. In 1989, when a full year of Lucky's sales will be included, American Stores is expected to pull ahead of Kroger as the nation's sales leader. Kroger in 1988 counted $19.1 billion in sales.

Lucky lost some of its top management during the hostile takeover. John M. Lillie, who headed Lucky Stores before the takeover as chairman-CEO, was replaced by former Lucky Stores President Lawrence A. Del Santo. Other personnel changes included company founder L.S. Skaggs, who gave up his CEO title but agreed to continue serving as chairman until 1993.

AT&T began marketing itself like a packaged goods product in 1989 by offering new accounts a money-back guarantee for long-distance service. The corporate campaign emanated from a general promotion ad budget that in 1988 allocated $92.1 million in media dollars, up 17% from the prior year, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The unusual approach, which followed an early corporate advertising phase stressing service through testimonials by AT&T employees, shows the extreme competitiveness of the long-distance market where it is becoming more difficult to separate the players by the services they offer.

AT&T is retaining a strong but slightly diminishing lead in the long-distance market in 1989 with a 68% share, compared to 71% in 1988, this despite a 38% decrease since divestiture.

This compares with 11.5% at MCI, up from 10.3%; and 7.5% at US Sprint, up from 6.8%, according to Northern Business Information, New York, which notes the market is growing at a rate that supports all the major players.

AT&T spent $141.4 million to advertise long-distance services for domestic, overseas and business in 1988. By comparison, MCI spent $39 million in advertising in 1988 on long-distance, and US Sprint $23 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Of the AT&T long-distance total, $71.5 million was for "long-distance," up 14%; $24.2 million for long lines overseas, down 25% and $45.7 million for long-distance business, up 129%. A new service, USA Direct, was introduced, providing direct access to AT&T operators for overseas calls.

Most of the AT&T general promotion spending of $92.2 million supported the so-called "anxiety" campaign on TV, that evolved in 1989 into the money-back deal —directed to customers who experimented with rival long-distance companies. Current spots ask consumers to make the switch to AT&T and offer to pay for the reconnection fee back to the current supplier if they are unhappy with the service.

Just this summer, federal Judge Harold Greene waived restrictions prohibiting AT&T's entry into electronic publishing. The decision is spurring AT&T's involvement in videotex and other information services. It is thought that AT&T's entry into the arena could finally develop that industry into a mass market service.

AT&T ended its five-year alliance with Olivetti this summer and entered into an agreement with Intel Corp., Santa Clara, Calif. AT&T's computer philosophy now relies less on selling stand-alone computers and more on networking. The computer segment is expected to break even in 1990 after years of losses.

In 1988, AT&T won the U.S. Air Force account, its largest computer contract in its five years in the business. The contract could ultimately total $1 billion.

AT&T beefed up its consumer product-related advertising in 1988 as it targeted the market for its answering machines, cordless telephones and advanced feature phones at $3.8 billion. Its 425 AT&T phone centers were recently redesigned. The operation was backed with $14 million in ad spending in 1988, up from only $3 million in 1987.

Ad spending for AT&T Information Systems grew 13% to $28.1 million from $24.9 million in 1987, virtually all in network TV.

AT&T lists its 1988 ad expenditures at $773 million, including salaries and other expenses which AA estimates exclude.

During 1988, the company agreed to buy up to 20% of Sun Microsystems. In July, it announced a joint venture with GTE Corp. It acquired Paradyne Corp., a data communications company, for $250 million in February. It also purchased Eaton Financial Corp., an office equipment financing company and U.S. Trusts Advanced Information Service subsidiary, a financial services company.

AMR Corp.'s American Airlines subsidiary, which became the nation's top carrier in 1988, will continue its promotion strategy of an overall corporate campaign supported by highly-targeted programs aimed at key demographic groups.

American held an 18.7% share of the U.S. market through the first seven months of 1989, up from 16.2% in the same period a year ago, according to PaineWebber, which bases its shares on revenues gained by carrying one paying passenger one mile. Former leader United Airlines dropped to 17.6% from 17.8% in 1988, while No. 3 Delta Air Lines rose a dramatic 2.2 share points to 15.3%.

Part of American's targeted marketing strategy includes a regionalized approach that began in 1988. For the first time, it ran separate campaigns by geographical region.

"We spend larger and larger portions of our promotional dollars in targeted efforts," said Michael Gunn, senior VP-marketing. "As we gain more information about various customers, we communicate differently with them." He cited seniors, golfers, frequent fliers and travel agents as some of the key groups the airline targets through separate programs.

A push to boost leisure travel will continue as ads spotlight "sun" and European destinations.

American will try to make the most of its favorable positioning among business travelers by stressing its service and performance in its ads.

Perhaps one cloud in American's skies was the Department of Justice's decision to turn down the proposed agreement to combine American's Sabre computer reservation system with Delta Air Line's DATAS II. That would have created a global computer reservations system to be marketed by a new and independent partnership.

The other disappointment came when Continental Airlines was awarded the coveted Seattle-Tokyo route that American also had sought. After a bitter court battle, the Texas Air unit won. American apparently will keep its eye on developing the Pacific market but attention has shifted to Europe, the Caribbean and South America for future growth.

While the U.S. beer industry stagnated, Anheuser-Busch Co. in 1988 raised its market share 1.1 points to 40.8%, according to Beer Marketer's Insights. Along the way, the company evolved into a new marketing role: innovator.

In a surprise to nearly everyone in the brewing industry, A-B, the world's largest brewer, became the first American brewer to market dry beers.

While others speculated about whether the less sweet, slightly dryer tasting brew that was a success in Japan would go over in the U.S., A-B in less than three months moved Michelob Dry from test to a November rollout.

And as if to prove that wasn't the only trick up its sleeve, it entered 1989 by quickly unveiling a series of additional new products, testing Budweiser Dry, Busch Light Draft, and turning O'Douls, a brand name for an Irish-style ale in test, into a non-alcoholic beer.

Most of the new brands were assigned to DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, agency for Bud Light and Busch. DDB Needham made gains at the expense of D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, St. Louis, agency for Budweiser.

But DMB&B benefited from O'Doul's and some A-B moves toward more promotional-oriented advertising tying brands together, most notably a Bud Bowl I promotion on the Super Bowl telecast in January 1989 that pitted Budweiser against Bud Light in a stop-action animated sequence. D'Arcy also picked up Budweiser's ties to rock groups—the Who's "Tommy" concerts and the Rolling Stones.

A-B acknowledged that the move to additional brands represented a change, but said its activity only reflected the beer market and the increasing fickleness of consumers seeking something new. With more niches and more brand changing, beer makers have to offer additional products, company officials said. They offered the example of Anheuser Marzen, a European-style beer test marketed in New Hampshire and now sold in St. Louis. TBWA, St. Louis, handles.

Company officials denied that the new beers indicated concern about Budweiser, but admitted growth may slow for A-B's top beer. Budweiser, the nation's top beer, last year saw sales rise to 50.45 million barrels. Bud alone represents 26.2% of the U.S. beer market. A-B has three other beers among the five top-selling brews and all gained last year. Only Michelob lost sales. This year, the Michelob family is showing strength, however, because of Michelob Dry. Also at midyear there were reports that Bud Light's sales were 18% ahead of the 1988 levels.

A-B upped its advertising for the new brands, but there were growing indications it also was looking for some economies in advertising, with dual brand promotions sometimes replacing individual advertising.

A-B's continuing growth did not come without a hitch. Its high visibility made it a target of various groups concerned about alcoholism, some calling for limiting beer advertising. The use of Spuds MacKenzie, A-B's dog presenter, was said to appeal to children and people not of drinking age, which A-B denied. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop at a 1988 press conference about alcohol used Spuds as a backdrop.

In 1988, A-B moved to limit damage by turning Spuds into a spokesdog for the "Know When to Say When" campaign urging responsible drinking and using the dog sparingly in Bud Light ads. Licensing of Spuds paraphernalia was severely cut back.

This year A-B took an even bigger step by expanding the "Know When to Say When" campaign with a $35 million budget. All of A-B's agencies are contributing.

Hal Riney & Partners, San Francisco, withdrew as an A-B agency last year to take on Stroh Brewery Co., Detroit, after failing to win much new business from A-B.

A-B continued to expand abroad and view other industries and products aside from beer for its future growth. Beer accounted for 77% of its worldwide revenues, up from 70% in 1987.

A-B is expanding its theme parks, now consisting of three Busch Gardens parks, to Barcelona, where a park and resort is to open in 1992-93.

Eagle Snacks and Cape Cod snack foods finally saw national distribution. A-B had problems with the snack foods and delayed opening a Visalia, Calif. plant to allow time to make product and packaging changes. The plant was opened early this year. Several product extensions, including nuts and a cheddar cheese popcorn, were added.

A-B claimed the expanding distribution brought its share of potato chips in the top 17 markets it served continuously to 10.8% through May 1989, up 4 points from a year earlier, while its nut share rose to 12.0% up 4.1 points from a year earlier, all according to Nielsen data.

Snack Food magazine reported that A-B's $125 million to $150 million in sales placed it fifth in sales of salted snacks.

Advertising in 1988 declined more than 10% at B.A.T. Industries' U.S. operating arm, Batus Inc., which seemed to take a rob-Peter-to-pay-Paul approach to advertising for the year.

Batus scooped a huge chunk of media advertising from its department store operation—especially Marshall Field & Co., reducing measured spending in that sector by 45%—but boosted tobacco spending by a whopping 58%.

B.A.T., consumed with matters of debt in 1988 when it bought Farmers Group of Los Angeles for $5.2 billion, half of which was through debt-financing, is believed to have held back on advertising as a result.

The ad budget could continue to reflect outside pressures in 1989. B.A.T. may have to make sell-offs to raise cash to fend off a hostile takeover attempt by Sir James Goldsmith.

Sir James offered this July to buy B.A.T. for $14 a share, or $21.4 billion arguing that B.A.T. executives have frittered away the company's robust tobacco profits on a series of less-than-stunning acquisitions—particularly Farmers. Analysts suggest that Farmers might fetch only $3.5 billion if sold today because a voter referendum recently trimmed insurance rates in California, the heart of Farmers' market.

Batus, which funnels the larger portion of advertising into its tobacco operation, Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., boosted tobacco measured spending to $59.9 million.

B&W, which contributes about 22% of B.A.T.'s annual profits, spent most of the heavy increase in media on its ultra-slim cigarette category. Capri, which B&W took national in July 1988, received $32.1 million in measured spending alone, up 110%.

Kool, B&W's flagship brand, received $19.2 million in measured advertising, up 47.7%. Kool ranked fourth among cigarette brands in 1988 with a 6% market share, virtually the same as in 1987, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities. It trailed Philip Morris' Marlboro at 24.9% and two RJR Nabisco brands, Winston at 10.8% and Salem at 7.4%.

B&W's share of the total U.S. cigarette market dropped slightly to 10.9% in 1988 from 11% based on a decline of 2.6% in unit volume sales, according to estimates by Mr. Maxwell, who noted that B&W benefited from its Kool sales and the national introduction of Capri and Richland 20s, a "branded generic." By contrast, Philip Morris was the only major tobacco marketer in 1988 to report a unit sales gain. The PM gain was 1.7%.

B&W's share of the price/value segment continued to decline. B&W products account for 20.5% of all price/value cigarettes sold in the U.S., down from 22.5% in 1987 and 26.6% in 1986, according to Mr. Maxwell. The industry's price/value segment, though, grew from 10% to nearly 11% of all cigarettes sold in the U.S.

B&W's advertising focus included expanding a new marketing and sales program for Kool, which the company said helped to significantly improve the brand's performance in 1988.

That program was based on the "Kool and Mild Today" advertising theme and placed heavy emphasis on nonmedia advertising, including direct mail. B&W also applied special promotional programs to other brands—Barclay, Viceroy, Raleigh and Belair.

Measured advertising for the Richland brand dropped 51% to $6.62 million, virtually all of that on the Richland Light 100s, which fell from $8.4 million in 1987 to $1.1 million in 1988.

In its department store business, Batus significantly decreased measured advertising 45% to $30.2 million, most of that decline coming from Marshall Field & Co. Field's measured spending plunged from $34.6 million in 1987 to only $8.4 million in 1988.

Saks Fifth Avenue, now Batus' largest retail advertiser, drew $19.7 million, up 13.2%. Saks' women's apparel received 65% of that total. Most of the remaining Batus measured retail spending went in support of Breuners, the large West Coast furniture and home furnishings store, which claimed $5.7 million in measured spending, up 5.6%.

In January 1989, Batus sold all its Thimbles women's specialty stores, in addition to two Marshall Field's stores.

Miles Inc., the big marketing unit of Bayer USA, the Pittsburgh-based subsidiary of Bayer AG, ushered in several new key ethical and OTC drug products and reorganized its sales force.

Miles' moved to bring its consumer healthcare marketing closer to its customer base by tying marketing to functional lines—brokers for food outlets, regional sales representatives for drugstores and a group to call on national accounts.

The division's Alka-Seltzer product line continued to account for the bulk of ad expenditures at Miles, the most advertising-intensive unit within Bayer. The brand accounted for $43.2 million in measured spending, down 17% from the prior year.

Considerable shuffling took place within the brand as Miles shifted ad weight to more recent line extensions. Alka-Seltzer Plus Cold Tablets ad expenditures grew 18% to $22.7 million and Extra Strength Tablets, the antacid, drew $8.1 million, up from only $1.4 million in 1987. Outlays for regular Alka-Seltzer nosedived 141% to $10.2 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The increased spending, which helped maintain Alka-Seltzer Plus Cold Medicine's position as the No. 2 cold remedy product in the U.S., also helped push the brand's sales to the top of the Alka-Seltzer line, surpassing regular Alka-Seltzer, which competes in a much smaller category.

Beta-carotene, a form of Vitamin A with the potential to protect body tissue from cancer, was added to the One-A-Day line.

S.O.S steel wool soap, the consumer household products division's largest brand, remains the market leader. S.O.S Glass Works, which claims to be the leading vinegar-based glass cleaner, also introduced an extra-strength ammonia-based formula.

Miles' pharmaceutical division launched Cipro, a broad-spectrum antimicrobial, and Nimotop, a calcium channel blocker. Cipro sales alone mounted to $140 million, equal to 8.2% of Miles' total sales in 1988. The dental division introduced Gluma, a powerful adhesive, and considered by Miles to be that division's most successful product to date.

The diagnostics division entered into an agreement with the Cooper Cos. to purchase Cooper Technicon, diagnostic systems developer. When completed, the deal will double the size of the division.

Agfa Corp. was formed in 1988 as a result of the merger between Agfa-Gavaert Inc., Compugraphic Corp. and Matrix Corp. All three of Agfa's divisions were active in new-product introductions. Agfa Matrix introduced a new digital film recorder; ProColor. Agfa Compugraphic's CG 9400-PS imagesetter for type and graphics is a new entry in that field. Agfa Photo reported a 70% increase in sales in 1988 through the introduction of 40 new films.

BCI Holdings Corp., parent of Beatrice Co., announced in April that it was looking for acquisitions after spending the last three years selling off businesses.

Beatrice is still one of the country's largest food manufacturers with Hunt-Wesson tomato products and cooking oils, Swift-Eckrich meats and Beatrice Cheese.

BCI was reduced to its Beatrice food unit when it sold its E-II operation to American Brands for $1.1 billion in early 1988. Culligan water systems, Samsonite luggage, Stiffel lamps and a number of office supply and furnishing companies were included in the sale.

BCI's 1988 measured media spending rose 13.8% on continuing operations, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The Butterball turkey line, including whole turkeys and lunch meats, got $7.1 million in media, down 13%. It was part of the total Swift-Eckrich spending of $12.9 million, off 21.8% from the prior year, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, lost the Eckrich account, including smoked sausage, franks and cold cuts, to Grey Advertising, New York, which also handles the Butterball turkey and Swift Premium Brown 'n Serve products.

Hunt-Wesson, which pulled its La Choy brands from J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago, and reassigned them to Dailey & Associates, Los Angeles, last year, increased ad spending 36.7% in 1988 to $7.7 million on La Choy Chinese foods. The division invested $3.1 million in media on its La Choy Fresh & Lite frozen entrees introduced in late 1987. Wesson Oil remained one of Hunt-Wesson's leading brands, pulling $7.9 million in media spending, up 51.9%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Hunt branded products received $18.7 million in measured spending, double the expenditure in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron. Hunt's Manwich Sauce and Hunt's Spaghetti Sauce drew more than $5 million each in media.

Measured spending on the nation's No. 1 microwave popcorn, Orville Redenbacher, was $12.7 million, up 14%. The entire line received $16.3 million, up 18%. Orville Redenbacher holds a 28.3% market share, down slightly from previous year's 30%. No. 2 General Mills Pop Secret, with a 21% share, invested $6.7 million in measured spending, down 14%.

Peter Pan peanut butter spending jumped to $9.4 million, up 37.5%, virtually all in spot and network TV. The Beatrice/Hunt-Wesson product teamed up with Walt Disney Studios' promotion of the re-release of "Peter Pan" this summer.

Bell Atlantic continues its push to reduce its dependence on regulated network services by moving into cellular telephone, on-line information services for personal computer operators and seeking business abroad. Revenues from its unregulated businesses reached 40% of the corporate total in 1988, up from only 20% in 1987.

Bell Atlantic this June launched a campaign touting its "IQ—Intelligent Network," which links different communications systems such as facsimile machines and computers.

The corporate campaign features celebrities, including Jason Robards, Alex Haley and Roberta Flack. The campaign targets both businesses and residential users.

J. Walter Thompson USA, which handles the campaign, won the account from Ketchum Advertising in June 1988. Its first creative, begun in mid-September, was a corporate campaign themed, "We're More Than Just Talk," to portray Bell Atlantic as more than a telephone company.

Bell Atlantic spent heavily to advertise its Yellow Pages directories in 1988. New Jersey Yellow Pages received $6.2

Leaders past, part of the present

Where have all the Leaders gone? In the 34-year history of Advertising Age's report on the 100 Leading National Advertisers, the players have changed dramatically.

Aside from the fact that the price of admission to the Top 100 has risen to $108 million in advertising from $5.7 million in 1956, the first year of the ranking, the makeup of the top 100 has been heavily influenced by several major marketing movements: emergence of a mass market, consolidation, shift to a service economy and globilization of America.

Movement of the population from farm to city in the post World War II era and the tandem emergence of television as an ad vehicle produced a mass market for many local advertisers for the first time. Many largely single product-dominant companies—Morton Salt, Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Wesson Oil & Snowdrift, Andrew Jergens, Simoniz, Bulova Watch Co. and Beech-Nut Life Savers among them—found their way into the Top 100 at this time, only to be swallowed up in subsequent market upheavals.

Industry at the time of this mass migration also began its evolution from basic to consumer, or heavy to light. Nine marketers whose advertising levels were tied heavily to so-called white goods, or household appliances, occupied slots among the Top 100 though they quickly departed. Norge (from Leader, Avco Mfg. Co.), Bendix (from Borg-Warner), Philco, Sunbeam and Westinghouse were among them.

The most dramatic change among the Leaders—and America's corporations as a whole—was the heavy consolidation that took place in the '60s and early '70s, and then later duplicated in spades in the mid-'80s to the present. The "strong" among the Leaders consumed the "weak." Eighty-three former Leaders now rest in toto or in huge chunks within this year's 100, while 18 others have left the charts after being consumed by non-Leaders.

The accompanying timetable demonstrates this heavy consolidation. And sandwiched between these two periods, was the economy's rapid movement from basic to service evidenced by the emergence among the top 100 of computer companies, credit card suppliers and the Baby Bells—and the opening up of America to foreign marketers.

NOTES TO TIMETABLE

This timetable is a compendium of the "lost" or former Leaders which were acquired in whole or in part by this year's Top 100 at least some time in their past. The company entry following the date was either a 100 Leader itself or the ad-driven division that propelled its parent into the Top 100. A 1989 Top 100 is in bold if it is the current resting place of the past leader. The (see . . .) notations trace the seller and/or buyer as they journeyed through the Leader's chart.

million, up 26%; Chesapeake & Potomac got $5.5 million, up 45% and Bell of Pennsylvania got $4.8 million. Virtually all dollars were in spot TV.

The Bell Atlantic I.Q. Services family of calling features currently are being rolled out. They include Ultra Forward, which allows the programming of call forwarding instructions; Identa Ring, a single line with multiple telephone numbers each with a different ring and Caller ID, which displays the number of the calling party. The latter service met some opposition from consumers and civil liberty groups over issues of right to privacy.

Bell Atlantic's Information Gateway—which offers personal computer users access to information services through a single telephone line—began tests at C&P Telephone and Bell of Pennsylvania in 1988. Videotex services also may enter other markets depending on current tests in Philadelphia and Washington. Advertising of this targeted service is chiefly through direct marketing.

Bell Atlantic Mobile Systems, the sixth largest cellular carrier, expanded its customer base 50% in 1988 over the prior year as advertising grew to $280,000 from $126,000, almost all outdoor. Ad spending is likely to increase because cellular is increasingly becoming a retail service as costs drop. Bell Atlantic International is boosting its activities overseas. It reached agreements in Spain and the Netherlands to upgrade national telephone networks, and this summer, announced the formation of European headquarters in Brussels. With generally fewer market restrictions abroad, markets overseas are beginning to lure the Baby Bells.

Borden continues its three-part strategy for continued development: higher ad spending, greater internal efficiencies and acquisitions.

Total ad spending in 1988 increased an estimated 46%, according to Advertising Age. Borden says its total 1988 budget for all ad "related" costs was $455.2 million, including $384 million for "promotions."

Besides its lead in dairy production, Borden is the world's biggest pasta maker and marketer; No. 2 in snacks, behind PepsiCo's Frito-Lay; biggest marketer of canned specialty seafood—clams, crab, shrimp and oysters; biggest producer of ice cream, fat-reduced cheese products, bagged popcorn, single-portion foods for foodservice, household glues, canned spray paint and wallcoverings. It also is No. 1 in production of forest-product adhesives, which are the binders of plywood, and PVC film.

Dairying, the cash cow that Borden milks to keep other divisions healthy, is the heart of the company, generating 26% of sales and 16% of operating income. Basically a commodities business, it receives little advertising. For the first time in many years, Borden allotted media advertising—$740,000—for its Meadow Gold fresh dairy products on a marketwide scale.

This past year Tracy-Locke, Dallas, got the estimated $5 million Borden dairy account previously handled by two Chicago shops, HDM/Dawson Johns & Black and Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt (now Bozell Inc.).

In a rollout of the Creamettes pasta line nationally—its first national pasta brand—Borden invested $7.9 million in print and broadcast TV.

Measured spending of $27.8 million for Borden's hottest marketing area—niche groceries—represented 73.8% of its 1988 media total. The allotment included nearly $10 million for macaroni products and more than $12.3 million for the nationwide debut of premium Classico pasta sauces, a brand that came with Borden's June 1987 acquisition of the Prince Co.

Some 94% of the Classico spending was for network and spot TV. This helped buy 6% of the $1 billion pasta sauce market, moving Classico to No. 3 behind leaders Ragu and Prego, even though it sells at a premium, some 50% more than either of the top two.

In the pasta market, industry estimates put Borden's Creamettes line at No. 1, followed by No. 2 Hershey's with its several brands at 18% and No. 3 CPC International's Mueller brand.

The Creamettes account moved in 1988 to Grey Advertising from M&H Advertising, New York. In the $7 billion U.S. salty snack market, Borden's share has been creeping up as market leader Frito-Lay's has been declining slightly. Borden's share in 1988 was 8% of market compared with Frito-Lay's 50% (down from 53% in 1987) and Anheuser-Busch's Eagle Snacks, 1%. Borden spent $2.3 million in measured media on its salty snack lines, down 36%.

Its potato chip brands (Guy's, Jays, Krunchers, Ridgies, Seyferts), climbed to about 15% share of market from 11% two years ago, while Frito-Lay slipped from 40% to 38%.

Borden's dominates several categories. It holds 75% of the packaged lemon and lime juice business, 60% of the bouillon market, half the market for diet aged cheese and caramel popcorn (Cracker Jack) and just about all (possibly 95%) of the condensed milk and packaged mincemeat business.

A major part of the company's efficiency strategy is the hyperplant, a huge production facility that combines five or six smaller plant functions to turn out many products at the single site.

From March 1986 to mid-July 1989, Borden spent $1.55 billion to acquire 70 companies; it received $944 million in divesting 21 companies that did not meet growth or product plans. Major 1989 acquisitions were Canada's John Labatt Ltd., United Maple Products and Catelli Inc., which holds Canada's biggest market shares in both pasta (35%) and pasta sauce (22%).

Earlier in 1989, the $3.3 million Aunt Millie's Family Style spaghetti sauce account was assigned to Solin Associates, New York. Martinez Associates, Dallas, became Borden's first Hispanic agency of record.

Bristol-Myers Squibb has become the second largest pharmaceutical company in the U.S. behind Merck & Co. with the merger of Bristol-Myers and Squibb Co.

The company, its merger to be formalized this October, offers an edge in the fast-growing conversion of prescription drugs to OTC remedies, analysts said. The OTC market could grow to $30 billion in the next 10 years, up from its current $12 billion, fueled largely by prescription drugs that will be converted to OTC products, said analyst Robert Benezra of H.C. Wainwright, Boston.

Analysts viewed the merger as a good fit, giving B-M an expanded presence in research, while giving Squibb a consumer products heritage.

Squibb's recent efforts to develop OTC products haven't been successful. A fall 1988 test of analgesics under the Squibb-Care name never rolled out, and the company last year pulled its support for Proto-Chol fish oil caplets after that market went belly up.

Richard Gelb, Bristol's chairman-CEO, will maintain that title in the merged company. Richard Furlaud, Squibb's chairman-CEO, will serve as president, with responsibility for pharmaceuticals. The new company will be headquartered in New York, but Princeton, N.J.-based Squibb will maintain its offices.

Through this August, the merged companies hadn't announced any new agency relationships. In consumer advertising, Squibb was a minor force, having spent just $4 million via Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York.

The Bristol-Myers Squibb merger followed two other mergers in the drug industry this year: Beecham PLC and SmithKline Beckman Corp. as SmithKline Beecham, and Marion Laboratories with Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals.

Analysts said unlike the other mergers—which came out of weakness—both Squibb and Bristol were financially strong corporations.

B-M continued to benefit from the groundswell of evidence linking aspirin and heart attack prevention. Currently, the FDA permits marketers of aspirin to advertise aspirin as a prevention against a second heart attack only, but new studies have uncovered evidence of aspirin's effectiveness in preventing a first heart attack. Industry observers expect the FDA to permit broader aspirin claims as early as this fall.

Despite publicity about its benefits against second heart attack, aspirin unit sales in 1988 were flat, while dollar volume increased 7% to more than $800 million in retail sales due to price hikes, according to Kline & Co., Fairfield, N.J.-based pharmaceutical consultants.

Aspirins hold 40%, acetaminophen's 40% and ibuprofens 20% of the total analgesic market valued at just over $2 billion at retail. Among aspirins, Sterling Drug's Bayer has the top share at 7% total market, followed by American Home Product's Anacin, with about 6%. B-M's Excedrin and Bufferin brands rank third and fourth, each with about 5% of total market, said Kline & Co.

Among acetaminophens, J&J's Tylenol Regular and Extra-Strength hold 25% of the entire analgesic market, said Kline. Ibuprofens are paced by AHP's Advil with 10% of total market, followed by B-M's Nuprin at 5%, according to Kline. Both brands saw sales growth of about 20% in 1988. Johnson & Johnson's Medipren, also an ibuprofen, holds about 3% of market.

In 1988, ad spending on aspirin industrywide increased 22% to $102.7 million, according to LNA/Arbitron. B-M was definitely a part of that surge, having doubled spending for Bufferin from 1987 to $16 million in 1988. That increase came at the expense of B-M's other analgesics. B-M cut ad spending for its Nuprin ibuprofen by 19% to $24 million and held spending on Excedrin at $19 million.

Bristol-Myers Squibb's overall measured ad spending in 1988 was up only about 1.6% from a combined level in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Apart from the heavy spending on analgesics, the Clairol line of hair care products drew the next largest concentration of ad dollars—$45 million, down 7%. Bristol-Myers remains the leader in the $440 million women's hair coloring market, with a 60% share, followed by Cosmair's L'Oreal with 25% and Revlon's 5%.

After controversy erupted over the six-year old theme, "Soup is Good Food," Campbell Soup Co. revived its "M'm'm good" tag line and refocused marketing on its core red-and-white label soup brands.

The company was rewarded in fiscal 1989 with a 14% increase in net sales for the first nine months, and a 2.9% increase in net earnings.

Campbell recovered from a stagnant fiscal 1987 by refocusing marketing efforts and re-evaluating line extensions. Campbell also had to deflect unfavorable attention from regulators over nutrition claims made for its soup products. The company ultimately settled ad claim disputes with nine states, while a court battle is pending with the FTC.

A popular campaign for Home Cookin' soups, featuring the voice of actor Jimmy Stewart, typified the kind of down-home, emotive feeling Campbell used to advertise its soups under the new creative direction. Home Cookin' received $8.4 million in measured spending, up 55%. Measured ad spending of the red-and-white label soups increased by 6% to $28 million, while Chunky soups ad spending rose 43% to $12 million.

Campbell in 1988 tested microwave soup, packaged in single-serve omnicups and Super Combos, microwave-ready soup and sandwich duos.

The company considered at length establishing an incentive system for agency compensation, but eventually nixed the idea.

For fiscal 1990, which began August 1989, Campbell has announced a 15% increase in its marketing and ad budget. Two-thirds of the increase will go toward promotion. Promotions in 1988 included women's sport-oriented sweepstakes, endorsements from U.S. Olympic figure skater Jill Trenary and a line of children's clothing featuring the chubby-cheeked Campbell Kids.

In March 1988, Campbell's Prego spaghetti sauce went on the offensive against category leader Chesebrough-Pond's Ragu with comparative 15-second TV ads showing two plates of pasta, one with Prego, looking thick and chunky, and one with Old World Ragu, looking so watery it disappeared into the noodles. While Prego attributed a 19% boost in unit sales to the campaign, Ragu called foul and urged networks to refuse the spots. Prego's market share, which had fallen to 18% by late 1987, had risen to 23.9% by April 1989. At the same time, Ragu lost 4 share points, falling from 52% to 48.3%. Prego pulled $14 million in media advertising, up from $7 million in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Canned pasta also has been a high-growth segment, climbing 8.4% last year to $548 million. American Home Products' Chef Boyardee dominates the category with 58.3% to Campbell's 35.7% through its Franco American brand, which got two line extensions—Teddy O's and Sports O's—in 1988.

Although premium-priced dinners represent about one-half of dollar sales of frozen dinners, the category experienced a 2.1% drop in 1988 and is losing shelf space rapidly. Sales in 1988 of $500 million were only half of the $1 billion high of 1984.

Campbell had banked on consumers paying extra for the microwaveable convenience. Highly successful brands, such as Campbell's Le Menu, which had carried a price of about $3.89, are receiving stiff competition from Kraft's low-price Budget Gourmet, priced at around $2.39. Le Menu's measured media fell to a minute $410,000 in 1988, from $2.6 million in 1987 as it diverted spending to price promotion and couponing.

In late 1988 and into 1989, Campbell shifted its emphasis to Le Menu LightStyle products, which carry an average price of $2.89 and are promoted as having lower fat content and fewer calories (300) than other frozen entrees. LightStyle has 10.4% of the premium dinner segment, according to the company.

A campaign from Saatchi & Saatchi themed "Drink V-8 and keep your diet straight," helped Campbell increase its share of the $340 million red juice market from 48% to 54%. V-8 spent more than $10.5 million in measured media, double its 1987 outlay.

The death in April of Campbell's Chairman John T. Dorrance Jr., son of the company's founder, fueled takeover rumors because of his large 32% holding in the company. Speculation ebbed, however, when Mr. Dorrance's son, Bennett, joined the board.

Campeau Corp., saddled with heavy short-term debt related to its $6.6 billion buyout in 1988 of Federated Department Stores, has taken draconian measures to reduce debt by putting its crown jewel, Bloomingdales, up for sale this month.

The company's big Federated Department Store unit initiated a cost-cutting program this year that includes lower ad expenses. Campeau achieved economies by merging its Federated and Allied divisions to coordinate warehousing and distribution facilities, electronic data and credit processing, store design and construction and certain merchandise purchasing. Federated also is converting to a more incentive-based compensation for its personnel.

Bloomingdale's, which operates 17 department stores in 10 states, recorded a 3.5% increase in fiscal 1988 sales to $1.19 billion, which represented 13.7% of Campeau's total revenues. Analysts believe the operation could draw bids from $1.1 billion to $1.6 billion, including one from it Chairman-CEO Marvin S. Traub.

Bloomingdale's had been conceived as the hook for future Campeau growth. Campeau in joint venture with Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. had planned to develop new shopping centers and expand and renovate existing ones using Bloomingdale's as the anchor. Slow growth in retail sales this past year has left Campeau cash-flow poor.

A report that another Campeau chain, Lazarus, was cutting its ad spending by a third as a result of Campeau's directives was denied by Ralph Holt, divisional VP and director of advertising and analysis for the Lazarus. As it was, media spending at Lazarus in 1988 dropped 8.1% to $7.9 million, according to LNA/Arbitron. Lazarus has changed its ad strategy, though, replacing heavy use of direct mail with weekly newspaper inserts.

Federated, which now has five divisions, operated 14 pre-merger general merchandise divisions. The sale of its Foley's, Filene's, Bullock's/Bullock's Wilshire and I. Magnin divisions was part of the acquisition agreement.

Campeau also divested four Federated divisions that did not fit into its "focused department store strategy," including MainStreet, Filene's Basement, The Children's Place and Gold Circle. Ralph's, Federated's supermarket operation, was recapitalized and spun off into a separate subsidiary wholly-owned by Campeau.

The remaining divisions include:

Abraham & Straus, which operates 15 department stores in the New York area, had net sales of $721.1 million in fiscal 1988 (ended January 1989), down 2.9%. Measured ad spending was $25.1 million, down 4.2%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Burdine's, which has 28 department stores and two clearance centers in Florida, totaled sales of $835.4 million, up 1.2%. Media ad spending at Burdine's was $14.7 million, up 8.1%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The Lazarus division, with 43 stores in Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, West Virginia and Michigan, had sales of $945.7 million, up 6.9%.

Rich's, which now includes 20 Rich's stores in Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina and six Goldsmith locations in the Memphis area, had sales of $850.5 million, down 1.4%. Media spending was $22.9 million, up 8%.

Bloomingdale's media advertising totaled $30 million, down 19.8%.

Carter Hawley Hale, which split into two separate companies in 1987, built back its advertising budget in 1988 after paring it to the bone during reorganization.

Company documents show media spending of $71.8 million for its fiscal year ended July 30, 1988, a dramatic comeback in spending from $32.5 million in fiscal 1987—the low point in its spending since the early 1980s.

This nadir in advertising spending occurred duringa period in which Carter Hawley Hale beat back the second takeover attempt in two years by The Limited and also sold off its specialty store division.

CHH's estimated media spending in 1988 of $87.9 million for this report is based on calendar 1988 as monitored by LNA/Arbitron.

When the specialty store operations—Neiman-Marcus, Bergdorf Goodman and Contempo Casuals—went public, 60% of its shares were taken by General Cinema Corp. which by then had collected 49% of CHH to keep it from The Limited. The stores now fall under the Neiman-Marcus Group name.

Carter Hawley Hale, which continues to operate 113 stores in five divisions—The Broadway-Southern California, The Broadway-Southwest, Emporium Capwell, Thalhimers and Weinstock's—is focusing its efforts on remodeling existing locations.

Some 60% of the company's capital budget is being spent on remodelings, estimates William Dombrowski, VP-corporate affairs. Work was completed on 14 stores during the last fiscal year and plans call for improving eight to 10 more stores this year.

A new Thalhimers was opened in Charlotte, N.C., last summer. The Broadway-Southern California, which has opened three new stores since 1985, will enter the Santa Barbara market next summer. The Broadway Southwest will open three new stores in the Phoenix area in the next two to four years.

The two big store operations, Broadway and Emporium Capwell, have shown strong ad growth the past year. Broadway Department Stores spent an estimated $56.3 million on advertising in calendar 1988, up 7.9%. Virtually all was in newspapers.

Emporium Capwell spent $27.3 million in measured advertising, up from only $9.8 million in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

In the third quarter of fiscal 1989, Carter Hawley Hale Stores reported sales of $595.4 million, an increase of 9%. On a comparative store-to-store basis, sales were up 8% for the quarter, giving the company its highest increase in four years.

Chrysler Corp., whose U.S. market share continued to rise in 1988, is seeking to broaden its base by signing pacts with several international automakers to market their cars in the U.S., and for the first time since the 1970s, established a market for its North American vehicles in Europe.

Chrysler's automotive subsidiary, Chrysler Motors, signed a joint marketing agreement in 1988 with Italian automaker Alfa Romeo to sell Alfa Romeo cars in the U.S. Then in early 1989 it announced it would market in the early 1990s vehicles made jointly with Renault and Hyundai. The Renault deal will put a sports utility vehicle produced in both the U.S. and Europe in the European market by 1992.

Chrysler also scaled down its involvement with Maserati after repeated delays in the launch of the Maserati-built Chrysler TC. Chrysler has reduced its purchases of TCs and waived its option to build its ownership in Maserati beyond its current 18%.

The company entered the rental car business in May 1989 when it purchased Thrifty Rent-A-Car, the nation's fifth largest car rental company. In 1988, Chrysler sold 25% of its cars to such rental-car fleets. While margins are lower with such sales, the unit volume keeps the factories open.

As part of a drive to sharpen brand image, Chrysler instituted a new approval process for its advertising whereby top-level management gets involved earlier in development of the creative.

Chrysler is considering a centralized media buying unit at one of its three agencies and a new agency compensation system, both targets of cost-cutting that may extend also to media expenditures and sports merchandising.

During 1988, Chrysler sold 1,191,294 cars in the U.S., up 8.7%, for a market share of 11.25% compared with 10.72% the prior year. Among its divisions, Dodge provided the strongest volume growth. Some 508,308 Dodge brand cars, led by the Aries, were sold, up 25%, and pushed the brand to 4.80% of the car market from 3.97%.

Chrysler's U.S. truck share, excluding Jeeps, rose to 15.67% from 15.17% of the light-truck market based on sales of 763,309 Dodge trucks and Plymouth/Dodge minivans. Jeep sales of 253,454 units, up 21.6%, gave the line a 5.20% share of the same market, up from 4.46%.

Chrysler introduced the Plymouth Laser in January 1989 and its sister car, the Eagle Talon, in July 1989. Both cars, along with the other sister car, the Mitsubishi Eclipse, were built at Chrysler and Mitsubishi's joint venture Diamond-Star factory in Bloomington/Normal, Ill.

The 1990 model year will bring new luxury cars—the Chrysler Y-body New Yorker Fifth Avenue, Chrysler Imperial and the Chrysler A-body LeBaron. Also coming at mid-year is the Dodge Shadow convertible and the Dodge Monaco, the sister car to the Eagle Premier.

In 1989 model year advertising, Dodge changed its tagline to "The new spirit of Dodge" to emphasize the division's new K-car replacement, the Dodge Spirit. The Spirit was introduced during the Super Bowl telecast.

Chrysler continued to use its "Driving to be the best" themeline and spokesman Riccardo Montalban. The spots continued to tout Chrysler's "Crystal Key" warranty policy on its luxury cars.

Eagle continued to use its themelines "The Next Step" and "Expect the best" as it built its image with new products such as the Eagle Summit and monochromatic Premier ES.

Jeep continued its "Only in a Jeep" theme and also signed an agreement with clothing manufacturer Murjani International in September 1988, to market Jeep clothing and sporting goods through Jeep Gear stores and other upscale retailers.

Chrysler again turned to its favorite spokesman, Chairman Lee Iacocca, for corporate advertising. Last fall, he touted the "The Car Buyers Bill of Rights," pitching everything from safety to customer satisfaction.

To facilitate change of leadership when Mr. Iacocca retires in December 1991, Chrysler set up a two-person office of the chairman built around him and Gerald Greenwald, vice chairman.

Citicorp has a simple goal as banking deregulation goes into full force in the 1990s. It wants to become the world's first global consumer bank, the McDonald's Corp. of banking.

Citicorp has taken a first step by forming a national marketing unit, based in Chicago, to take over some of the marketing functions of its regional banks. It has selected Foote, Cone & Belding to handle its national marketing assignment and boosted its advertising more than 24%.

That assignment is to "present one face to the public across the country," says William Ahearn, VP-public affairs. This might mean an introduction nationwide of its CitiOne account, a combined checking, savings and credit card service, and an automated teller system, mutual funds and annuity products.

Experts caution the marketing strategy may not be easy to achieve, noting intense local competition may be tough for centralized management.

Senior Citicorp officials expect the company's consumer bank to earn $1 billion in 1993, up from $540 million in 1987. Consumer banking now accounts for 46% of Citicorp's earnings and that should soon grow to 70%.

Citicorp serves 8 million households in 40 foreign nations and plans to up that to 16 million in five years. In Europe, Citicorp's biggest successes have resulted from competition on service, giving customers a perception of the bank's "friendliness" instead of a "hat in hand" attitude.

Some critics caution its overseas expansion may be too rapid, especially in light of political risks in nations such as China and Panama.

Citicorp's media mix is changing to reflect a more McDonald's-like concentration on TV. Spending on TV has more than doubled to $56.4 million in 1988, divided almost equally between network and spot. Ad monies were slashed, however, from newspaper and spot radio budgets.

Corporate image campaigns, by N W Ayer, New York with the slogan "Americans want to succeed, not just survive," also doubled to $34 million. Spending for its MasterCard and Visa has jumped 127% to $29.1 million.

Citicorp, with 23.1 million MasterCard and Visa cards in use, recorded $23 billion in purchase sales. Citicorp and Citibank credit cards account for more than 12% of the bankcard market, the largest share in the U.S.

Clorox Co. is scuttling its unsuccessful diversification into paint and now will refocus its attention on the grocery store.

The company early this year added a lemon-scented liquid bleach to its mainstay business, helping to turn back a Procter & Gamble bleach entry. P&G gave up on its own liquid bleach (Lemon Fresh Comet liquid bleach) this spring following a 1988 test, securing Clorox's hold on the bleach market at a 62% share.

At the same time, Clorox gave the brush off to its paint and stain business eight years after beginning an unproductive diversification. It put its Olympic wood stain and Lucite house paint business up for sale in June 1989. The business was only marginally profitable in recent years.

Measured spending on Clorox liquid bleaches and its two color-safe companions, Clorox 2 dry bleach and Clorox 2 liquid bleach, reached $35.9 million, up 47% from 1987 representing one-third of Clorox's total 1988 media budget, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The company has moved its Clorox bleach-enriched detergent into 45% of the country, with most of the $3.9 million expenditure for the new product in spot TV. Heavy promotional expenditures also were required to combat a tidal wave of activity from P&G. P&G—which spun off Clorox under antitrust decree 20 years ago—blunted the company's move into detergents by sending Tide With Bleach into national distribution January 1989.

Clorox went national with a bleach version of Soft Scrub soft-abrasive cleanser following testing in early 1988. Clorox supported the Soft Scrub line with $11.2 million in media, up 67%.

This past summer the company began testing Clorox Clean-Up, a general-purpose liquid cleaner that mixes bleach with detergent.

Capitalizing on its dominant position in charcoal briquettes, where it markets Kingsford and Match Light, Clorox last spring launched nationally Kingsford BBQ Bag, a 10-pound bag of charcoal that can be tossed onto the grill. It also put the Kingsford name on charcoal lighter. Measured spending for Kingsford and Match Light dropped 12.4% to $7.8 million.

While most of Clorox's additions were cleaning products, the company extended its Hidden Valley Ranch salad dressing line with bottled Ranch Italian. Measured spending on Hidden Valley Ranch dressings and mixes totaled $16.2 million, up 43.4%.

Spending on Tilex tile cleaner reached $5.3 million, up 47%. Liquid-plumr received $4.9 million, up 16.6%. Formula 409 all-purpose cleaner was backed with $4.7 million, down 14.5%.

Clorox had a run-in last July with the Christian Leaders for Responsible Television, an advocacy group against sex, violence and profanity in TV. It hit Clorox and Mennen Co. with a one-year boycott for its sponsorship of several "offending" prime-time TV shows.

Clorox tightened its broadcast sponsorship standards early in 1989. After reviewing the programs cited by the boycott group, Clorox concurred that two episodes of "Miami Vice" in retrospect didn't meet its standards because of their violence.

Clorox said it would be more careful in reviewing shows. But the company did not alter its broadcast standards. Clorox contends its standards are acceptable to the "great majority" of TV viewers.

John W. Collins will take early retirement the end of this year as president-COO, a post he took in 1986.

Coca-Cola Co., which saw its market share lead over PepsiCo drop slightly in 1988, narrowed the focus of its beverage holdings and turned controls of Coca-Cola USA over to a marketing executive out to restore the pizzazz to Coke advertising.

Coca-Cola rose 0.1 market share points to 40% of the 7.5 billion case soft-drink market as Pepsi-Cola rose 0.4 market share points to 31.3%, according to Beverage Industry. Archrival PepsiCo also topped Coke's U.S. sales performance by recording a 6.1% gain compared to a 5% gain by Coca-Cola. The industry averaged a 4.5% gain.

U.S. ad spending at Coca-Cola remained flat in 1988, but should increase if newly-named Coca-Cola USA president, Ira Herbert, its former chief marketing officer, continues with the marketing fireworks Coca-Cola set off at the Super Bowl.

Coca-Cola provided football fans a 45-second commercial in 3-D. Prior to the game, Coca-Cola passed out 20 million pairs of 3-D glasses for home audiences to watch British pop star George Michael's first appearance in the cola wars. Coca-Cola Co. also pulled off exclusive sponsorships with both the National Basketball Assn. and Major League Baseball.

Advertising control also was brought back to the trenches in 1989 when Mr. Herbert placed ad controls in the hands of brand managers, a policy swept away in 1987. Coca-Cola has been building upon its strength in the diet segment, accounting for 44.3% of the market with Pepsi at 28.4%.

In a media blitz this year, Diet Coke, with 31.4% of the diet segment and 8.2% overall, was positioned against the flagship Pepsi brand to help further erode its No. 2 position, which fell from 18.6% to 18.3% in 1988.

Pepsi-Cola typically stands opposite Coke Classic and new Coke, which registered respective market shares of 20.1% and 1.3%. That 1988 performance represents an increase for Classic, up from 19.8% and a decline for new Coke, down from 1.7%.

Sprite mirrored its 1987 performance by claiming a 3.6% overall market share while chief competitor 7UP slipped to 3.1%.

Minute Maid held its lead in the $3 billion orange juice market with an estimated 22.1% share to Tropicana Products' 18.1% and P&G's Citrus Hill's 9.5%. The company added the Citrus Foodservice Division of H.P. Hood Inc., the primary supplier of orange juice to McDonald's Corp.

An estimated 14% of Coke's total measured advertising in 1988 went to Minute Maid beverages compared to 12% in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron. This year, Coca-Cola served up a $50 million campaign in the growing ready-to-serve, chilled segment where Tropicana claims 27.5% market share vs. Minute Maid's 19.5%.

Coca-Cola narrowed its beverage lineup this year when its foods division in Houston dumped the bottled water, coffee, tea and cocoa operations. Coca-Cola Co. continued its acquisition of bottlers with the $500 million buyout of Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Memphis, Tenn. and a 41% stake ($330 million) of AMATIL Ltd., Australia.

Colgate-Palmolive Co. had mixed success in building U.S. market share in its big household-cleaning and personal-care businesses as it linked up joint ventures and bought heavily into these product areas overseas.

Colgate acquired Cotelle's bleach business in France; the Klorin group, a Scandinavian bleach marketer; and Gow Co.'s heavy-duty detergent business in Australia.

It reached agreement with American Home Products Corp. to market AHP's Woolite cold-water wash in selected countries, formed a venture with Clorox Co. to market its bleach in Asia and Mexico, and struck a deal to market Vipont Pharmaceutical's anti-plaque product line in Europe.

Financing much of the activity was the $960 million sale in September 1988 of Boston-based Kendall Co., marketer of disposable medical products and Curity brand bandages.

The company's three-year-old Colgate Venture Co. was disbanded. Two products—Handi-Wipes cleaning cloths and Fresh FeLiners catbox liners—were shifted to Colgate's Softsoap Enterprises subsidiary. Others were sold.

Colgate launched 173 new products on a worldwide basis in 1988. And according to Chairman-CEO Reuben Mark, new-product advertising and promotion kept pace, rising 9.76% to $236 million in 1988.

Colgate controls 42% of the $2.6 billion worldwide toothpaste market, and 33% of the $1 billion U.S. dentifrice category where Procter & Gamble (Crest) has a 36% share.

The company in mid-1989 broke a new series of ads for its $25 million "Wise Choice" toothpaste campaign featuring actor Pat Morita as the Colgate "Wisdom Tooth."

Colgate doubled its spending for mouthrinse in 1988 to $8.7 million in measured media. It claims a 5% share of the $550 million U.S. mouthwash category.

Colgate Junior fruit-flavored toothpaste was introduced in the U.S. in 1988, and this year was expanded into 10 countries. Colgate in late 1988 broke a $9 million campaign featuring the animated Colgate Junior Superstar that competes against P&G's Sparkle Crest for Kids.

New Colgate toothbrush lines were introduced into eight countries, including the U.S. Marketing emphasis was on the brush's diamond head design. The company backed the toothbrush line, which has a 14% world market share, with more than $3.3 million in measured media spending in the U.S.

Under an agreement with Vipont Pharmaceutical, Fort Collins, Colo., Colgate will begin testing a new brand name, along with new advertising and marketing, for Vipont's Viadent antiplaque toothpaste and mouthrinse line in Europe.

Colgate's laundry detergents —Fab, Fresh Start and Dynamo—all suffered share erosion in 1988. The company's share of the $3 billion laundry detergent category slipped to 12.3% from 14% the previous year. Despite a $17 million measured media campaign to promote Fab 1 Shot, an all-in-one laundry/fabric softener, the brand managed only a 2% share. Colgate watchers believe the product is one of Colgate's biggest disappointments in 1988.

An advanced formula liquid Palmolive Automatic dishwasher detergent was introduced in August 1988, with a $15 million campaign themed "Once is all it takes." Before the campaign, Colgate's share of the $475 million category had fallen to 11.5%, but by mid-1989 had rebounded to 13%. In the $100 million liquid segment, Colgate is the No. 1 brand with a 43% share. P&G's Cascade liquid and powder automatic dishwasher detergents remain the overall category leader with a 52% share.

Palmolive is the company's leading global brand name in personal care, and Colgate has adopted an aggressive program to exploit the name. In 1988 and 1989 year-to-date, more than 50 new products bearing the Palmolive name were introduced worldwide. These include 20 new entries in the hair-care category. It is the world's No. 2 shampoo on a volume basis, the company said.

New Palmolive products for bathing and shaving are being introduced, as well as an expanding array of deodorants and toiletries. In the U.S., Palmolive Hypo-Allergenic soap is in West Coast test markets.

Colgate continues testing in Peoria, Ill., a line of analgesics, allergy, antacids and cough-cold remedies under the Colgate label. It is handling creative in-house; HDM, New York, is placing media.

A new Softsoap shower gel and antibacterial liquid soap were introduced in the U.S. in 1989 by Softsoap Enterprises, a 1987 acquisition. In April 1989, Softsoap introduced nationally the new Softpack refill package, which is based on packaging technology developed by Cotelle.

The new products are aimed at helping Softsoap regain share from Dial Corp.'s Dial anti-bacterial liquid soap. In May, Dial held a 17.25% share of the $200 million liquid soap category, while Softsoap held 13.5%. Softsoap was backed with $1.7 million in measured media spending in 1988, more than double the support in 1987.

Softsoap, which also markets Ajax Disposer Care, Fresh FeLiners and Sesame Street bath products, is working with agencies on a project basis.

In 1988, Hill's Pet Products introduced a "light" low-calorie version of Maintenance Diet for dogs and cats. Dry product line extensions for three Prescription Diet feline products were marketed in the last half of the year, rounding out the canned product line used by veterinarians.

For the past five years, Columbia Pictures Entertainment Inc. has failed to produce top box-office hits or achieve stability in its executive ranks, but the company appears to be turning itself around. It is re-establishing relationships with major motion picture stars and producing TV shows that have the potential to be profitable in syndication for years to come.

The company in early 1989 also moved to streamline its operations by creating a single Motion Picture Group from the merger of its Columbia Pictures and Tri-Star Pictures units.

Coca-Cola Co. retains a 49% interest in CPE, which it formed through the merger and spin-off of Columbia Pictures and Tri-Star Pictures in 1987. CPE, which continues to distribute movies under both the Columbia and Tri-Star banners, in 1989 released its first movie since 1986 to make more than $100 million at the box office: "Ghostbusters II."

Though not the money-maker that its prequel was (the original "Ghostbusters" rang up $220 million in ticket sales in 1984), the $109 million gross it brought in was a much-needed boost.

The ghostly sequel also should bring in significant additional profits when released on videocassette this fall.

Newly-released romantic comedy "When Harry Met Sally . . ." also has been successful, grossing $60 million by mid-September when it remained among the nation's top five films.

These films have helped push Columbia's and Tri-Star's combined theatrical rental share for the summer of 1989 to 13.8%, a significant increase over the 9% share it maintained from 1987 to 1988.

The company stepped up measured ad spending for its Columbia and Tri-Star releases by 23.4% to $85.5 million in 1988. Six films received $5 million each in measured spending, the top dollar draw at CPE. But though the studios had some critical hits ("The Last Emperor," "White Mischief," "Little Nikita," "Hope and Glory"), they failed to win the movie-going public.

Under the leadership of President Dawn Steel, Columbia is re-establishing relationships with prominent actors, producers and directors. Prominent performers who have ongoing relationships with Columbia and Tri-Star include Jane Fonda, Sally Field, Michael Douglas, Glenn Close, Madonna, Richard Gere, Cher and Mikhail Baryshnikov.

While Ms. Steel brought some stability to the highest level of Columbia Pictures, the studio's marketing ranks were in flux throughout 1988. Bob Dingilian resigned as exec VP-worldwide marketing in April, to be replaced by BBDO executive Dan Michel. Mr. Michel, who held the title of president of marketing, left the studio less than a year later and was succeeded by Buffy Shutt.

Columbia Pictures Television has five popular series currently appearing in prime time on the Big Three networks and Fox Broadcasting Co.

"Who's the Boss?" "227," "Designing Women," "Married . . . With Children" and "My Two Dads" each should generate enough episodes to be successful in the lucrative domestic syndication arena for years hence.

CPT is currently running one of the industry's most aggressive promotion campaigns ever for the off-network premiere this fall of "Who's the Boss?"

CPT products in the syndication arena include "Good Times," "The Jeffersons," "The Facts of Life," "Silver Spoons" and "Punky Brewster."

CPE expanded its Loews theatres in 1988 into major metropolitan areas east of the Mississippi River and in Texas, from the chain's New York/New Jersey stronghold. The company acquired Loews Theatre Management Corp. in December 1986.

Adolph Coors Co. produced a record volume of beer in 1988, but overall earnings dropped. The company cited steeply-rising advertising and marketing costs associated with the viciously, competitive beer market dominated by two still-growing giants—Anheuser-Busch and the Miller Brewing Co.—and a trailing pack of smaller brewers nibbling around the edges of a stagnant market.

Industry analysts say the only way for a brewer to increase its market share today is to steal drinkers away from the competition and expand product lines. To that end, Coors boosted its advertising 28% in 1988 and introduced two popularly, priced beers this month.

Coors, which saw its market share rise slightly to about 8.7% in 1988, passed G. Heileman Brewing Co. (8.2%) to become the nation's fourth-largest brewer, behind No. 3 Stroh, which held an 11% share.

Still, Coors ranked far behind A-B, which controls 41.9% of the market, and Miller, at 21.6%. Coors' share is based on 16.5 million barrels, up 5.6%.

Coors Light continued to lead the company's charge. Swallowing more than $52 million of Coors' ad budget, and spending much of it regionally, Coors Light moved from No. 6 in 1987 to No. 4 in Beer Marketer's Insights 1988 top ten brand chart. Sales were 8.9 million bbls., compared with 50.5 million bbls. for leader Budweiser; 19.3 million bbls. for Miller Lite and 9.7 million bbls. for Bud Light.

Coors Extra Gold—a premium, full-bodied beer that debuted in 1985—was a rising star—almost 1 million bbls. were sold in 1988, up from 200,000 in 1987.

The standard Coors brand, however, slipped from No. 7 to No. 8, as it dropped 12.5% to 6.3 million bbls.—a slip some analysts attribute to "cannibalization" by Extra Gold. Company officials also believe part of the decline is attributable to a failure of the standard Coors Banquet beer to retain its loyal drinkers when its name was changed to Original Draft, a name mimicking the draft-beer-in-a-can craze started by Miller Genuine Draft. Five months after the move, Coors dropped the Original Draft tag. The GSD&M agency reworked a new campaign to focus on the beer's Colorado roots.

In 1988, Coors went national with its Herman Joseph's Original Draft and HJ Light superpremium brands. The brewer spent at least $5 million to get out its "the-smoother-the-better" message in an effort to go head-to-head with A-B's Michelob and Miller's Lowenbrau.

Killian's Red—a competitor with Heineken, Beck's and Corona Extra—was distributed nationally and then underwent name, packaging and formula changes. The beer officially became a lager—the term "ale" was dropped altogether—and its alcohol content was reduced to produce a lighter taste.

This September, Coors was to launch Keystone and Keystone Light in the so-called "popular," or lower-priced segment, which now comprises 14% of the beer market.

Coors, which had been heavily investing in sports promotions through the mid- and late-1980s, dropped its biking classic but sponsored a Coors bike-race team and other sporting events.

Coors owners say they no longer have an aversion to going into long-term debt to finance expansion plans. That about-face has led to plans to construct a $150 million aluminum rolling mill in San Antonio, and a possible merger or acquisition of production facilities owned by the struggling Stroh Brewery Co.

Coors has increased its international efforts with Asahi in Japan and Molson in Canada, who both brew and market Coors and Coors Light. Coors is considering a plan to export its products to the U.K. and the European Community in the next two years.

CPC International, which introduced reduced-calorie mayonnaise two years ago, continues to ride the health trend with the 1989 launch of a cholesterol-free mayonnaise.

The company, which notes that fewer new products are in the pipeline even though it offered 200 new products and line extensions in 1988, is banking on another winner. Hellmann's and Best Foods reduced-calorie mayonnaise have built a 9% share in the U.S. mayonnaise market since introduced in 1987.

The Hellmann's brand currently holds a 50% share (equal to its record 1987 figure), with Kraft at 23% (down 1%). In sandwich spreads, however, Kraft commands 54.6% as well as 92% of the spoonable salad dressing, according to Jane Shickich, analyst with Prudential Bache.

Overall mayonnaise ad spending rose 12.7% to $13.5 million, according to LNA/Arbitron. Hellmann's Light garnered $10.2 million, a 154% increase, with Hellmann's regular dropping 67% to $2.4 million.

After a big drop in media spending for Mazola products in 1987, CPC expanded the brand's media budget by 20 times to $10.6 million. A large part of the increase was $3.4 million in support of its new Mazola light corn oil spread.

Ms. Shickich reported corn oil shares holding steady: Mazola carries 15.7% of the market (down from 16%); Procter & Gamble's Crisco 18.2% (down from 18.3%) and Beatrice Cos.' Hunt-Wesson Foods' Wesson Oil 17.9% (down from 18.6%).

Mazola light spread, 30% of the Mazola margarine business, generated a share growth of 25% for total Mazola margarine line, according to the company. Ms. Shickich places Mazola with a 2.8% share, behind Parkay 18%, Lever Bros. 25.8% and Nabisco 26.4%.

CPC's Knorr line of soups, sauces and bouillons introduced the Delicias de Mexico line and opened a plant in Asheboro, N.C., to produce its soups and sauces previously imported from Switzerland.

Best Foods Baking Group's Thomas' English muffins ranks as the No. 1 English muffin, with a 32% share. Ad outlay for Thomas' grew 17.5% to $5.7 million. New bakery products introduced regionally were: Brownberry light bread, two new English muffin varieties and Sahara Pita bread.

Mueller's introduced four new pasta shapes, additional flavors of Mueller's Salad Bar Pasta and a Chef Series line of pasta side dishes. Ad spending for Mueller's was down 57%, according to LNA/Arbitron, largely due to a decline of 76% to $1.5 million in spending for Salad Bar Pasta Mixes. Mueller's share of the pasta market dropped slightly from 15% to 14% while Borden's remained at 31% and Hershey's rose one share point to 18%.

After 10 years of pushing a nutrition image, Skippy peanut butter opted for a strategy to broaden the products usage. Network TV commercials now revel in the fun of "Skippy Dippin' "—use of peanut butter as a dip for such snacks as pretzels. BBDO Worldwide, New York, won the account from Saatchi & Saatchi. Ad spending for the brand remained stable at $5.7 million.

Ms. Shickich said Skippy, market leader until five years ago, has 22.2% of the market (down from 23%), Jif leads at 30.2% (up from 29%) and Peter Pan comes in with 15.3% (from 15%). Skippy is continuing expansion into the Southeast with a special, sweeter product formulation. Overall, volume increased 8%.

CPC continued to expand production and brands abroad. It also acquired four companies in 1988 and six in early 1989. The company drew 57% of its sales from abroad in 1988.

Dayton Hudson Corp., after ending its earnings slide in 1988, is concentrating on its three main apparel businesses representing 591 stores.

Not included in that picture is Lechmere's, a 27-store chain Dayton Hudson has agreed to sell to Berkshire Partners. An appliance, consumer electronics and leisure-time equipment store chain, Lechmere's spent $14.8 million in measured media in 1988, up from only $4.8 million in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron. Its advertising is part of the Dayton Hudson composite in this issue.

Dayton Hudson also discontinued last year its Branden's home furnishing test concept of nine stores and absorbed $35 million of expense.

Dayton Hudson's measured ad spending remained flat in 1988 as a 12% boost in national newspaper advertising canceled out declines in spot TV and outdoor spending.

The company's strongest division remains Target, its upscale discounter. Target is making its presence felt in new markets in the Pacific Northwest and entered the Southeast as part of a 60-store expansion this year.

Apart from media advertising, Target is sponsoring the Trans-Antarctica Expedition of Will Steger, which began this August and is scheduled to conclude in March 1990. Over 300 products, ranging from camping equipment to plush animals themed to the trip, are being carried by Target. A Christmas promotion in 1988 featured Aretha Franklin.

Target got $41.6 million in measured advertising in 1988, down 8%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

A prototype for remodeled stores was introduced at Mervyn's, which opened 14 stores in 1988. Eight more new stores are planned for this year. In-store graphics were sharpened and private-label merchandise continued to be upgraded. Mervyn's attracted $35.3 million in media spending, down 17.5%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Dayton Hudson Department Store turned around a disappointing showing in 1987 although the division, which operates two stores, Dayton's and Hudson's, continues to face tough competition on its Minneapolis home turf. Last year, Carson Pirie Scott & Co., Saks and Polo entered that market, which also is set to get Bloomingdale's, Nordstrom and Neiman-Marcus stores.

Last year the department store broke its first TV image campaign, themed "Dayton's knows you." Spending on TV, however, remained only a blip on the $10.2 million (up 9.7%) in total measured spending screen monitored by LNA/Arbitron. Virtually all was in national newspapers. Hudson's outspent Dayton's with $12.1 million in media, up 14%.

Two employees from Campbell-Mithun-Esty, the agency that handled the account, have opened an in-house agency, Pigeon Productions. This gives the division greater creative control and cuts through the agency approval process, says Jack Mugan, DHDSC's director of creative services. Robert Thacker also moved over from Campbell-Mithun-Esty to join Target in April as VP-marketing.

The division also cut back its promotional advertising to center on regular-price merchandise, and increased the number of pages in "roto mags" the company produces and newspaper inserts, as opposed to running ROP.

Delta Air Lines is climbing to new heights on the strength of an expanding route structure, marketing partnerships and a costly strike at Eastern Air Lines, its principal competitor in the southeastern U.S.

Delta was the big winner from a strike at Eastern that began March 4, 1989. The strike crippled Eastern as it dragged on through key vacation travel months. In Atlanta, where both carriers have hub operations, Delta's share grew to 73% of 9.9 million emplanements during the first six months of 1989, compared with Eastern's share of 11.4% for the same period.

Delta benefited in 1988 from improved media buying efficiencies as a result of the April 1987 operational merger with Western Airlines. The $787 million buyout of Los Angeles-based Western gave Delta immediate strength west of the Mississippi River. It added 44 cities to Delta's route system, including hubs at Los Angeles and Salt Lake City, and added important new markets, such as Mexico, Hawaii, Alaska and western Canada.

The merger made Delta the nation's third-largest air carrier. Through the first seven months of this year, Delta's RPM share was 15.3% compared to 13.1% in the same period in 1988. No. 1 American Airlines was 18.7%, up from 16.2%, followed by No. 2 United Airlines at 17.6%, down from 17.8%, according to PaineWebber. RPM is a standard measure of revenue gained by carrying one paying passenger one mile.

Better U.S. coverage has enabled Delta to shift media spending away from spot TV in favor of image-oriented network TV. Network TV jumped 65% in 1988 to $23 million, while spot TV spending fell to $6.6 million in 1988, down 94%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

"We've always done network TV, but our spending is much more efficient today because Delta now covers the entire country," says Judy Jordan, assistant VP-advertising and sales promotion.

Delta's newspaper spending of $25.3 million, up 21%, is primarily image, not fare-related, she adds. However, Delta does promote fare-related ads in magazine and Sunday supplements as part of its "Dream Vacations" program.

Joint marketing efforts took on greater significance at Delta last year. A June 1988 agreement to become the official carrier of Anaheim, Calif.-based Disneyland is estimated to have cost Delta some $40 million.

But Delta used the agreement to develop an in-park promotional exhibit that was launched in April 1989, with consumer and travel agency sweepstakes and national advertising. A similar exhibit opened in October 1988, at Disney World in Orlando, where Delta also is believed to have paid about $40 million in 1987 to become that park's official carrier, replacing Eastern, which had held the contract for 15 years.

Delta is intensifying its international

Walt Disney Co.'s purchase of Henson Associates late last month, bringing Miss Piggy, Kermit the Frog, Gonzo and Fozzie Bear into the Disney playpen, characterized the Midas touch of Disney's Chairman-CEO Michael Eisner.

Earlier, Mr. Eisner announced plans to double the size of the entertainment portion of the Walt Disney World-MGM Studios attraction, which opened this May in Orlando.

And while many Hollywood studios have cut back production, last fall Disney announced it was launching a new film company, Hollywood Pictures, slated to produce up to 12 movies a year by 1992. Additionally, Disney increased its consumer products revenue base by 25%, with the acquisition of catalog marketer Childcraft Inc. in 1988.

The company is energetically pursuing cross-promotional opportunities, of which the largest is a 15-year agreement signed in April whereby Eastman Kodak Co. will pay a multimillion-dollar fee to use Disney characters in its advertising and will be the sole supplier of film at Disney theme parks. The addition of the Muppets can only promote similar merchandising deals.

Disney's "Who Framed Roger Rabbit," which grossed $78 million in theatrical rentals was the No.1 movie last year. Other Disney winners were third-ranked "Good Morning, Vietnam" and sixth-ranked "Three Men and a Baby." They have grossed rental totals of $58.1 million and $36.3 million respectively, since their late-1987 releases, according to Variety.

Disney led Variety's studio ranking of theatrical rentals with a 20% share, up from a second-place 14% last year—and a 3% last place in 1985. Second-ranked Paramount Pictures had 16% and 20th Century-Fox and Warner Bros. were tied at 11%.

Measured advertising for the films totaled $65.4 million, up from only $13.7 million in 1987. The heaviest concentration was in spot TV.

Disney released 14 films in 1988, including the heavily-promoted "Roger Rabbit," which had measured spending of over $7 million, and "Oliver & Company," for which over $6 million was spent.

In home video, "Cinderella," promoted via a reported $25 million campaign, sold over 7 million copies, making it second only to "E.T.," and helping push Disney into first place in home video sales. Measured spending for home video advertising increased 78.1% to $12.4 million.

Subscriptions to the Disney Channel now top 4 million. Measured ad spending for the cable service totaled $5.4 million, up 71.9%.

Although Disney reports lower revenues from TV, it continues to have hits in the "Golden Girls" and "Empty Nest" on network TV, and the syndicated "DuckTales," "Win, Lose or Draw" and "Siskel & Ebert."

In December 1988 Disney took over KHJ-TV in Los Angeles, its first TV broadcast property acquisition.

Price increases resulted in an 11% increase in total revenue from the company's theme parks and resorts, which include Walt Disney World and Epcot Center in Florida, Disneyland in California and Tokyo Disneyland. Attendance was down 5%, however, compared to record levels attained in 1987 when Disney World ran a 15th anniversary promotion.

Measured advertising for Disney's U.S. theme parks, hotels and resorts totaled $54.7 million, up 45.1%.

On the promotion side, Disney touted Mickey Mouse's 60th birthday in 1988 with an estimated $100 million, the U.S. portion of which AA included in the estimated unmeasured spending for Disney.

In addition to enhancing its direct marketing posture via the Childcraft acquisition, the Disney catalog was sent to more than 8 million homes, compared to 2.8 million the year before. Disney also opened 10 more Disney retail stores, bringing its total to 13 with 100 planned by 1992.

When Dow lacks products to give it access or greater exposure in a market, it buys the access through acquisition or some form of partnership as it did in 1988 and 1989.

The biggest of current alliances came this July with the announced merger of Merrell Dow and Lakeside with Marion Laboratories to form Marion Merrell Dow Inc., an entity to be 67% owned by Dow Chemical. Sales are projected at about $1 billion higher than the present Dow Pharmaceutical's $1.3 billion, making it the 13th largest U.S. pharmaceutical marketer.

Marion brings to the union its big ethical drugs division headed by Cardizem, the leading U.S. cardiovascular drug, and Carafate, fastest-growing ulcer medication in 1988.

Merrell Dow's prescription drugs include Seldane non-sedating antihistamine and Lorelco cholesterol-lowering agent. Seldane G, with an added decongestant, is awaiting government approval.

Marion's OTC lineup includes Gaviscan antacid, OsCal calcium products, Gly-Oxide gel hydrogen peroxide and Debrox ear wax softener.

Lakeside markets Citrucel, which is No. 2 at a 6.9% share of the bulk laxative market behind Procter & Gamble's Metamucil, Cepacol, No. 5 in the mouthwash market at a 4.5% share behind Listerine, Scope, Plax and Listermint. It also markets Nicorette, a smoking-cessation product.

In April 1989, Dow and Eli Lilly & Co., the Indianapolis-based pharmaceutical and chemicals company, announced formation of a joint venture company, Dow Elanco Inc., to produce and market insecticides, weed killers and seeds.

Sales of $1.5 billion expected in its first year would make Dow Elanco the biggest in the $5 billion U.S. agri-chemicals market.

Dow joined forces with Exxon Chemical Co., a specialist in adhesives and sealants, in June 1988 to develop new products and expand markets. The 50/50 venture will develop and supply styrenic thermoplastic elastomers. Dow contributes the engineering and manufacturing; Exxon provides the worldwide marketing and applications savvy.

In October 1988, it purchased for $345 million Essex Chemical Corp., Clifton, N.J. Essex's Special Products subsidiary, an industry leader in auto sealants and adhesives, gives Dow sales access to 80% of the world auto industry including all U.S. auto makers.

During 1989, Lakeside Pharmaceutical's Nicorette smoking cessation gum ran the first known brand-specific advertising of a prescription drug, nicotine polacrilex, stating, "If you have a smoking problem, use Nicorette." These ads, by Rubin, Gace & Associates, New York, are limited to print because of the required explanation of side effects. TV messages for Nicorette still don't name it. The brand received about $6 million in U.S. ad spending. On a worldwide basis, its sales jumped 44% to nearly $100 million.

The other big chunk of consumer spending was for Dow Chemical's packaged consumer goods group now called DowBrands, which got $74.7 million in measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Lamaur hair-care line, added in late 1987, gave Dow skills in marketing and distributing personal care products. Lamaur's advertising for 1988 brought another $13.6 million to the DowBrands' media budget.

Comparing existing home care and food care lines shows a combined 41% jump to $60.1 million, broken down into $34.8 million for home care (Texize and Fantastik cleaners among leading spenders) and $25.3 million for food care (Saran and Handi wraps and Ziploc bags).

For DowBrands, Henderson Advertising, Greenville, S.C., created an $18 million campaign to promote the food care division's introduction of Spiffits premoistened cleaning towels. The campaign, targeted to working women, began with TV spots in May 1989.

Ad spending for agricultural products eased up just 2% to a shade over $1.1 million in 1988 from a little more than $1 million in 1987, mostly for the pyridine-based herbicides and pesticides, such as Lorsban, used on cereals, forage crops and row crops.

Dow corporate advertising—the ". . . Lets you do great things" series in both the winter and summer Olympics—cost about $14 million.

Dr Pepper/Seven-Up Cos. will face two distinct challenges in the coming months: maintaining momentum for Dr Pepper brands and regaining momentum for 7UP products.

Although Dr Pepper Co. and Seven-Up Co. formally merged to become the nation's No. 3 soft drink company little more than a year ago, sales and marketing functions remain separate for the Dallas-based company.

Dr Pepper is coming off a record sales year with 13% overall sales increases in 1988. Regular Dr Pepper alone posted growth of 14.4% while Diet Dr Pepper was up 4.1%, according to John C. Maxwell, beverage analyst at Wheat First Securities.

The picture for 7UP products was bleaker. After record sales gains in 1987 led to a sharp turnaround, Seven-Up stumbled with the failure of spicy caffeinated 7UP Gold in 1988. Further, sales for 7UP last year were off 2.1% while Cherry 7UP was down 41.3%, according to Mr. Maxwell. Diet 7UP posted a slight 1.5% increase. Overall, sales dropped 6.1% in 1988 compared to the previous year.

Dr Pepper brands together account for a 4.8% share of the total 7.5 billion case soft drink category, and its Welch's grape juice line added another 0.5% giving the group a 5.3% share, up from 5.0% in the prior year, according to Mr. Maxwell. Regular Dr Pepper is the No. 5 selling brand with a 4.4% market share, and the top selling non-cola.

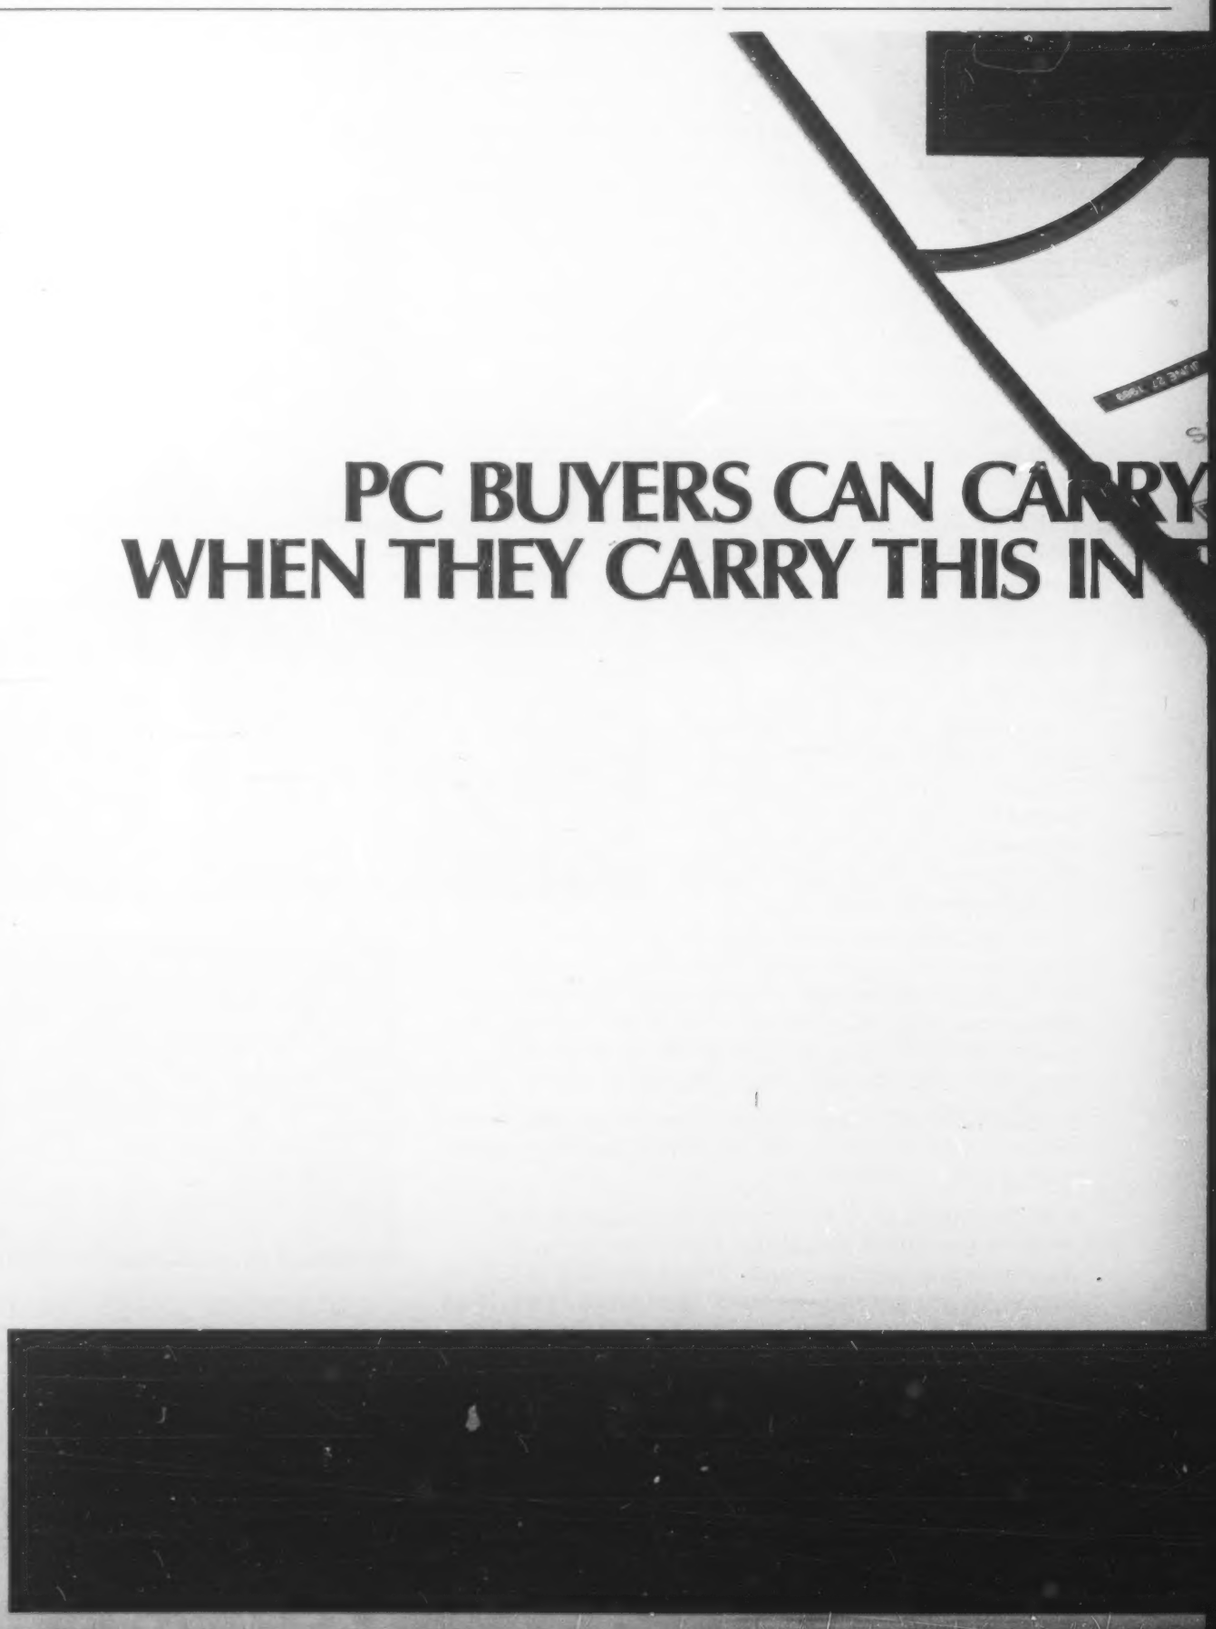
Seven-Up in late 1988 returned to a core brand focus with marketing emphasis on brand 7UP, Diet 7UP and Cherry 7UP. Its newest product, 7UP Gold, never grabbed hold nationally and basically has been dropped by most bottlers.

Ad dollars were directed 100% into network TV rather than local and regional buys—to achieve greater efficiencies and boost overall impact, according to Russ Klein, Seven-Up senior VP-marketing.

Olympic Gold Medal athlete Jackie Joyner-Kersee became spokeswoman for 7UP, Seven-Up continued to target children ages 6 to 12 with its "Spot" campaign, the animated character made from 7UP's red dot. Cherry 7UP also used its established "Isn't it cool in pink?" theme aimed at teens.

Early in 1989, Diet 7UP launched its own version of the cola wars: a campaign that poked fun at Coke and Pepsi advertising. The parody spots spoofed Coke's 3-D effort, the statistics game of how many people switched to which cola and the use of rock stars in commercials.

Seven-Up's overall market share slipped to 4.7% in 1988 from 5.2% in 1987, according to Mr. Maxwell. Brand 7UP dropped to the No. 8 position overall at a 3.1% share, edged out by Coca-



Cola's Sprite (No. 6) and Pepsi's Mountain Dew (No. 7). 7UP had been ahead of Mountain Dew in 1987.

"It's a daily vigil to hold our own when we have two giants that take aim directly against us," said Mr. Klein. "We want to continue to raise top-of-mind awareness for brand 7UP among teens and young adults."

Du Pont, which will enter the Sears, Roebuck & Co. furniture showrooms this fall with a line of upholstered chairs and sofas, continued to spend heavily in 1988 to advertise its fiber lines and finishes.

The furniture line, branded Lasting Images, gives added value to the Du Pont product, Dymetrol, a high-tech seating-support material billed as six times more durable than the usual springs and webbing it replaces.

As part of the sales promotion for the line, model living rooms will be installed in 450 of the retailer's larger stores and in-store video monitors will play tapes explaining the product.

Du Pont continued strong support for its Stainmaster carpet, which had sales of over $600 million in 1988. Measured ad spending on Stainmaster climbed fivefold to $31.9 million. Stainmaster led the 13% surge in increased media advertising for all Du Pont carpet fibers.

Media spending for fabric treated with Teflon stain repellent rose 11.4% to $5.9 million; Lycra fiber advertising was down 53% to $4.7 million; Dacron fiber advertising was up 8.7% to $3 million, while general fiber advertising rose 10.5% to $2.9 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Demand for Spandex, a fiber used to make tight-fitting stretch clothing, has resulted in a 10% jump in the sales of Lycra, a Du Pont fiber critical to its manufacture. With estimated sales of $600 million for Lycra, Du Pont is the world's leading supplier. Analysts say Lycra is Du Pont's most lucrative product.

The textile fibers operation provided the training ground for Du Pont's new chairman-ceo, Edgar Smith Wollard Jr., who succeeded Richard E. Heckert last April. Mr. Wollard approved the decision years ago to advertise Du Pont fibers directly to the public. The move was costly, but eventually paid off.

Changes may be afoot at Conoco, Du Pont's energy operation that now accounts for 30% of Du Pont's sales, although only 16% of its profits. Some analysts predict a partial spinoff as a means to better control costs. Conoco is valued as a supplier of the raw materials for 70% of the company's products that are hydrocarbon-based.

Among Du Pont's move to expand its printing and imaging businesses have been joint ventures with Xerox Corp. to develop electronic proofing technology and with Toyo Ink Manufacturing Co. of Japan to market inks in North America.

In May 1989, Du Pont, the leading U.S. printing plate and chemical supplier, bought Howson-Algraphy, the leading British plate supplier, from Vickers PLC. Howson last year had sales of $300 million, making it the third-largest supplier of lithographic plates behind Japan's Fuji Photo Film Co. and West Germany's Enco-Hoechst.

During the year, Du Pont strengthened its ties with Young & Rubicam, its agency of record for automotive products, imaging systems and polymer products in the U.S. Du Pont tapped Y&R for its $4.2 million Du Pont Canada account. Y&R Detroit also opened a satellite office in Wilmington this year.

Eastman Kodak Co., with a string of moves to reduce debt and overhead costs already under its belt, said in August 1989 it would trim the fat again. It plans to eliminate 4,500 jobs worldwide by yearend and sell off some unidentified businesses. The company also reported it would reduce ad spending, though it vowed "we will not jeopardize our clout in the marketplace."

Kodak earlier said it might renegotiate its major agencies' compensation agreements to include bonus incentives. J. Walter Thompson USA handles film and media buying; Young & Rubicam handles cameras. The incentive plan would not apply to agencies for Kodak's Sterling Drug subsidiary.

Kodak's media buying clout got a huge boost with its $5.1 billion purchase of Sterling in February 1988. Sterling, the larger advertiser of the two, spent over $150 million in measured media in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Kodak said disappointing second-quarter 1989 financial results—net income was down 85%—led to the latest restructuring, which Kodak claims will generate up to $1 billion in operating cash flow during 1990.

But that cash, and possibly more, could flow into the pockets of Polaroid Corp. which won a lawsuit in U.S. District Court in Boston against Kodak for infringing on seven of its instant-photography patents. Damages have not yet been determined, but Kodak's payoff has been estimated to be over $1 billion.

The company said it will increase in ad spending for film by 25%, partly to back the U.S. introduction of Ektar. Kodak spent about $35 million in measured media on film in general in 1988, LNA/Arbitron reported. Ektar will receive ad backing of $17 million in 1989.

Kodak said the sweeping restructuring and future efforts will not affect its major sponsorship deals signed this year. It signed a multi-million, 15-year deal with Walt Disney Co. becoming the official supplier of photographic products to Disney theme parks. This year Kodak was the second advertiser to sign on as a worldwide sponsor of the 1992 Olympics.

Kodak also said new product development has not and will not be slowed as a result of ongoing cost reductions. As evidence, Ektar was only one of 80 new or improved products to emerge in 1988 from Kodak. Other entries include three new models of it S-Series 35mm camera line, its first weatherproof 35mm camera, Ektachrome 100 HC film and Kodachrome 200 film.

Perhaps the most significant development this year in the U.S. conventional film market was the emergence of a new competitor, Polaroid Corp., which entered the $2 billion U.S. amateur-conventional film market in April with OneFilm, a single-speed, 35mm film backed by $30 million in advertising and promotional spending.

And while Kodak virtually owns the conventional film market with an estimated 80% share, analysts say Polaroid has a good shot at whittling away at No. 2 Fuji Photo Film USA's 10% share.

Kodak's Sterling Drug subsidiary, like other aspirin marketers, scurried in 1988 to take advantage of reports showing aspirin use may lower the incidence of heart attacks in healthy men.

Glenbrook Laboratories, the Sterling division that markets OTC drugs including Bayer aspirin, ran ads touting the findings, but under regulatory pressure Glenbrook and others softened their claims. The Bayer line got nearly $35 million in measured media in 1988, up 35%.

Expected sales gains for aspirin failed to materialize and this year aspirin marketers, including Glenbrook, shifted strategies to reemphasize pain relief in ads. Currently, in the aspirin segment of the $2.4 billion analgesic category, Bayer leads the market with a 7% share, with American Home Products' Anacin a close second at 6%, according to Kline & Co., pharmaceutical consultants. Bristol-Myers Excedrin and Bufferin brands rank third and fourth, each with about 5% of the market.

Besides slight gains in Bayer's market share, Glenbrook's U.S. sales also were paced by improved performances from three other brands: Midol menstrual pain-relief got $5.7 million in media, down 36%; Campho-Phenique topical antiseptic received $3.7 million, up 43% and Stri-Dex medicated pads got $5.1 million, up 53%, reported LNA/Arbitron.

Sterling says its Winthrop Pharmaceuticals division "will produce a flow of new ethical drug products by the mid to late 1990s." One such drug under development is Primacor in oral form. The drug is used for treatment of congestive heart disease.

Sterling's household division, Lehn & Fink, introduced new products and line extensions to such mainstay products as Lysol disinfectants and d-Con insecticides. The Chubs baby-wipe line was expanded as was the Lysol line which now includes a light scent spray.

Ford Motor Co. posted its third straight record profit year in 1988, while tightening the reins on its ad spending.

Ford consolidated several overseas ad accounts, struck up more joint ventures to expand its vehicle lines and diversified heavily into financial services markets.

But its rosy performance concealed the slugfest in the U.S. market where declining demand and stiffer competition led to incentive wars that cost some manufacturers $900 a vehicle.

Ford's ad budget in 1988 remained flat as the company put together high incentive packages to boost unit sales and market share. Ford's share of the U.S. car market climbed to 21.7% in 1988, its 10-year high, and 1.5 points above 1987.

Ford sold 2,205,336 cars in the U.S., up 9.19%, and 1,523,215 trucks, up 4.8% for 29% share of the light-truck market.

Ford added to its Ford Financial Services Group in 1989 with the purchase of The Associates for $3.35 billion. Earlier it purchased Meritor Credit Corp., which had $1.4 billion in assets. Ford is planning to generate 30% of its profits from its FFSG operations.

Ford continued to set up joint ventures with foreign partners to become more competitive globally, and to augment its product lines with minimum investment. It struck an agreement with Nissan to produce and sell a new mini-van in the U.S., giving Ford up to 70,000 new front-drive carlike vans by fall 1991. Ford and Mazda in May 1988 agreed to build the Probe, a sports car that received $26.3 million in measured spending in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron. Ford Division's third largest ad outlay for a nameplate.

Ford also inked a marketing agreement with Mazda for the latter to begin distributing three Ford vehicles through Mazda's U.S. distribution system in the next couple of years. The three include a redesigned Bronco II, a new small pickup and a redesigned Aerostar, being introduced beginning in 1991.

Ford consolidated its ad business worldwide with much of the changed accounts going to J. Walter Thompson USA. Ogilvy & Mather and Young & Rubicam hold other major pieces of business.

JWT defended its Ford de Mexico account in May, 1988, beat out O&M for the $7 million Taiwan-based Lio Ho Motor Co.'s account and picked up $5 million in business from Ford dealer co-op ad groups in New York and New Jersey. JWT ended up with about $400 million in Ford-related business in 13 countries.

The Ford Division account provides the bulk of JWT's dollars. In the U.S., the division sold 1,527,504 cars during 1988, up 9.9%, in out-distancing Chevrolet for the first time in nearly a decade. It maintained its long-standing "Have you driven a Ford lately?" theme and the more recent, "Winning the world over" tagline.

Heaviest advertised Ford Division nameplates were the Escort at $29.5 million, up 65% and Taurus $29.2 million, up 8.2%. The division spent $28.1 million, up 4%, on generic-type general promotion, and $25.5 million, down 32%, on Ford passenger cars, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Lincoln-Mercury and Y&R struggled to replace the theme, "The shape you want to be in," because its was considered outdated due to the plethora of competitive claims for aerodynamic styling. After a failed attempt at a new theme, L-M returned to its 1970s cougar to promote the image of agility and performance under a "Nothing moves you like a Mercury" themeline.

Lincoln continued to be promoted as "What a luxury car should be" and whittled down Cadillac's sales lead to less than 100,000 units. In measured ad spending, Continental leaped to $8.2 million, up 116%; Mercury Cougar got $11.3 million, up 1.8%; Mercury Sable drew $8 million, up 8.1% and Mercury Topaz received $9.9 million, up 106%.

Aside from nameplate advertising, heavy spending of $17.5 million backed Mercury passenger cars, an expenditure up 92%, and $8.4 million supported Lincoln-Mercury passenger cars, up from $2.5 million in 1987.

Taking a fresh tack in marketing promotion for 1988-89, the Franklin Mint moved to celebrity testimonials featuring Indy 500 champ Danny Sullivan and famed man-about-media Ted Turner.

Advertising Age estimates the Mint's total 1988 sales at about $600 million out of a total $800 million for parent company American Protection Industries, Los Angeles.

Franklin Mint advertises heavily, spending by its own count $200 million in 1988, about one-third its total sales figure and including all corporate costs it attributes to marketing promotion.

The Mint overwhelmingly favors print, but its use of TV is growing because of an evolving product line with more than 300 items. Says VP-Public Affairs John W. Wilkie, "Franklin Mint is a direct-response company. The mailbox is our business place; the printed page and TV screen our show window."

Coins, stamps and Faberge eggs, which appeal to the connoisseur, appear in magazines, direct mail and inserts. Franklin Mint books into TV with products having broad appeal, such as figures of "Gone With the Wind" and "Wizard of Oz" stars.

Franklin Mint spends $84.1 million in print advertising out of a total measured media budget of $90.1 million. Franklin Mint is by far the biggest 1988 spender in newspaper supplements among AA's top 200 advertisers with $29.7 million in the medium, up 69.6% from 1987.

Newspapers and TV were limited to ads for books, coins, coin watches and board games. National newspapers got a 69% boost to $5.4 million in 1988.

Ad support for all of the Mint's major lines was up, but none as sharply as for jewelry, which rose 117% to $13.5 million. Sales volume leader for the company was its numismatic product line which received $36.5 million in measured media, up 75%. Porcelain drew $35.8 million in media, up 54%.

A prime ad medium for the Mint is its glossy Almanac magazine, a bimonthly distributed to more than a million readers, produced in-house. The company has been handling its own print advertising in-house, retaining Griffin Bacal, New York, for TV. But in 1988 the Mint took over its own creative and placement.

Acquisitions and divestitures were common in the 1980s at General Electric as it honed itself from 100 diverse operations to 14 key business areas that are among the world's leaders. Now the company has started to turn to joint ventures as an added strategy.

Alliances in 1988 were linked by GE Lighting with Toshiba of Japan and by GE Motors with Bosch of West Germany, and expanded by GE Electrical Distribution and Control with Fuji.

Earlier this year GE completed a deal with GEC of the U.K. in which the two combined business investments in appliances, electrical distribution equipment and gas turbines. This August, GE entered a joint agreement with Ericsson of Sweden, a telecommunications company, to expand the mobile radio and cellular telephone businesses worldwide.

"GE's intent is not to gobble up big pieces before it knows precisely how things are going to shake out . . . but to learn what's going to go on and then create a base from which you can build," said Mark Altman, first VP, PaineWebber, New York.

The restructuring of GE to concentrate on its 14 core businesses, however, has given the company less of a consumer orientation, which has translated in recent years into less ad spending. This year's 3% increase halts two successive years of declines.

The major reason ad expenditures were up was a near doubling of GE's general promotion ad spending to $38 million. Most divisions reduced measured spending in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Major appliance spending, where GE is locked in a battle with Whirlpool for the lead in the $16 billion market, dropped 49% to $8.2 million in measured media in 1988.

Spending in media for light bulbs also dropped, according to LNA/Arbitron, but the division's ad budget, handled by BBDO Worldwide, increased to more than $20 million in 1988 from $15 million in 1987. The company has a 50% share of the $1.5 billion consumer bulb market in the U.S. but is under fire from rival Philips Lighting Corp., the worldwide leader in light bulb sales.

The other big spender among GE divisions was NBC. The nation's top-rated network spent $34.6 million in measured media in 1988, down 3.1% according to LNA/Arbitron. The majority of the spending went to magazines.

This year the network tied in with Sears Roebuck & Co. to create an "Instant Stardom" sweepstakes to create excitement surrounding the fall season premiere of new shows and bring viewers back to network TV. Entry forms are submitted at Sears stores. The contest and NBC's fall shows are supported by the network's on-air promotions and in four Sears' circulars this month. CBS-TV is running a similar tie-in with K mart.

The three-network average primetime share of total viewers during the 1988-89 season slipped to 68%. NBC's 16.1 rating was flat compared to the previous year, but was good enough for first place for the fourth year in a row. NBC also won all 30 weeks in the season. As the leader, NBC benefited from an extremely strong upfront market this summer, reaping about $1.6 billion in advance sales. The Big 3 networks and Fox Broadcasting Co. totaled a record $4.2 billion in upfront sales.

Program content on the networks became an issue this year with various groups attempting to organize boycotts of advertisers who bought time in shows deemed "indecent." NBC was under fire for some of its racier TV movies and miniseries, in particular, because it laid off 10 of its 12 broadcast standards division employees as a cost-cutting measure. The network has since added new personnel to the department.

NBC President Robert Wright has taken a leading role in attempts by the three networks to change the existing financial interest and syndication rules that prohibit networks from owning programs or syndicating products in the U.S.

Faced with declining audiences and potential declines in revenues, the network is being driven to seek alternatives. NBC, the same as parent GE, is looking overseas to expand its businesses.

The network purchased 37.5% of Visnews TV for $10 million. Reuters Holdings and the BBC also have major holdings in the service. NBC affiliated with the Australian Television Network, with an option to own a 15% stake, and has a 15% ownership agreement with TV-3, a new network in New Zealand.

Continuing its role as a programmer and a software provider, NBC signed an agreement with Westinghouse Broadcasting to jointly distribute programs from NBC Productions.

NBC paid $137.5 million in December 1988, for 50% of Cablevision Systems' existing cable program services including Bravo, American Movie Classics, News 12/Long Island News Network, Sports-Channel America and five regional sports channels. In turn, Cablevision got a 50% interest in NBC's new cable channel, Consumer News and Business Channel, which debuted this April 17 with 13 million subscribers. The cable channel is NBC's first venture into cable, and cost an estimated $65 million in start-up expenses. It is expected to lose money this year.

As part of the deal with Cablevision, NBC will make some of its 1992 Olympic programming from Barcelona, Spain, available to cable TV subscribers through a pay-per-view package.

NBC, which originally anticipated a hefty profit from its coverage of the 1988 Summer Olympic Games from Seoul, Korea, was disappointed with the event's ratings. The cable pay-per-view package could cut NBC's risk and insure a profit in 1992.

Business restructuring is a major focus at General Mills, which in May 1988 sold its last specialty retail units, Eddie Bauer and Talbots, to focus on its consumer foods and restaurants divisions.

In fiscal 1989, General Mills closed all York Steak House retaurants, resulting in a loss of $27.3 million. The company's frozen novelties division, Vroman Foods, was sold in June 1989, resulting in a loss of $26 million.

General Mills' Big G cereals achieved a 24.6% annual dollars share of the $6.3 billion ready-to-eat cereals market based on sales of $1.4 billion, up 21%. Advertising across all brand lines totaled $209.6 million, up 27.1%.

For the second consecutive year, Cheerios received the most measured spending of any General Mills cereal—$50.2 million, up 52%. To capitalize on consumer interest in oat bran and strengthen market share, General Mills invested $10 million in a TV and print campaign from Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York.

The company also rolled out Apple Cinnamon Cheerios, which completed nationwide distribution in February 1989, becoming Big G's best-selling new brand since Honey Nut Cheerios. Combined dollar volume market share for the three Cheerios products in fiscal 1989 was over 8%, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities.

Total Raisin Bran, newest member of the Total line, completed national distribution in April 1989 with an introductory $28.7 million ad budget. Kellogg's Raisin Bran commands a 3.5% market share in dollar volume while General Foods USA's Post Raisin Bran has 2.0%.

The company has committed $25 million in advertising to launch Benefit cereal. Ads cite a General Mills study showing cholesterol reductions of 9% with a diet using the cereal.

The oat bran craze sweeping the country has affected the hot cereal market where industry sales reached $730 million, compared to $500 million a year ago. Big G completed its second year in the market with a 9.0% combined share for its Total Oatmeal and Total Oatmeal Swirlers.

General Mills held a dominant 65% share of the $305 million add-meat dinner mix market and increased its measured ad spending 17.4% to $10.8 million for its Betty Crocker Hamburger Helper line. It maintained the lead in the $390 million family flour market with its oldest consumer product, Gold Medal flour.

The Betty Crocker line drew $37.4 million in advertising in 1988, down about 29%, according LNA/Arbitron. In February 1989, General Mills moved $26.9 million in measured spending to DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago, from Campbell-Mithun-Esty, Minneapolis. Assignments included Betty Crocker Potato Medleys and Microwave Potatoes (General Mills holds 60% of the $133 million specialty potato mix market) and Suddenly Salad (General Mills holds 55% of the $73 million dry-packaged salads market).

General Mills held solid No. 2 market positions in the $1.1 billion yogurt market with Yoplait at 21%, up 4 share points (Dannon has 25%); and a 21% market share for Pop Secret in the microwave popcorn segment behind Orville Redenbacher's 28.3%. The company introduced Yoplait Light with NutraSweet this February with an estimated $25 million national TV campaign from DDB Needham Worldwide, Chicago. Print and FSIs support.

Red Lobster Inns Restaurant, with 444 restaurants in 38 states, can now make efficient use of network TV advertising. Network spending in 1988 grew 6.8% to $39.5 million out of total Red Lobster media spending of $50.8 million, up 5.2%, according to LNA/Arbitron. Olive Garden continues to beef up, adding another 53 units to bring its total to 145 in 22 states. Another 50 are planned in 1990 in more than 20 new markets. Its national media spending remains nominal.

General Motors Corp.'s share of the U.S. car market declined for the fourth straight year in 1988, but the company is staying on track with its long-range plan to develop distinct images for its five car divisions.

Buick, Cadillac, Chevrolet, Oldsmobile and Pontiac divisions all are planning to keep their same ad theme lines in 1990, an indication that company officials believe that products now in development will provide the eventual "proof" of the marketing messages.

Improved earnings were attributed to programs aimed at bringing costs under control, but U.S. profits would have been even stronger except for continued heavy reliance on consumer incentives to move inventory.

Worldwide factory sales of vehicles reached 8,108,000, up 4.4% from 1987. In the U.S., GM sold 3,822,014 cars, a 2.5% increase, and 1,689,406 light-duty trucks, an increase of 13.8%.

GM's U.S. car share was 36.08% in 1988, compared to 36.47% in 1987. Buick's share of the market was 5.49%, up from 5.45% in 1987; Cadillac fell to 2.52%, from 2.56%; Chevrolet declined to 13.97%, from 14.67%; Oldsmobile fell to 6.75%, from 6.99% and Pontiac rose to 7.36%, from 6.80%. In the light-truck market, Chevrolet and GMC Truck combined grabbed 34.7%, up 2.5 points from the previous year.

It became clear in 1988 that GM was adjusting to the reality that it could no longer dictate the market to its competitors or consumers. The company's car market share was 44.5% in 1984, before beginning its continuous slide. The significant increase in ad spending in 1988 reflected a decision to pour money into new-product launches and into troubled divisions.

In 1988, GM boosted Buick spending 51.3% to $118.3 million; Cadillac by 56.1% to $48.4 million; Chevrolet by 16.6% to $178.1 million; Oldsmobile by 98.7% to $139.5 million and Pontiac by 62.2% to $94.9 million.

GM spent $112 million in measured media in the first six months of 1988 to launch three new mid-size coupes, Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme, Buick Regal and Pontiac Grand Prix. The introduction of the mid-size Chevrolet Lumina sedan in April 1989 was accompanied by an estimated $70 million ad and promotions blitz that used Walt Disney Co.'s animated characters in a tie-in to the new Disney/MGM Studios theme park in Orlando, Fla.

The most troubled brands are Buick and Oldsmobile. Almost all of GM's lost sales in the last four years have been traced to the two big-volume aspiration nameplates. For the 1989 model year, Oldsmobile's ad budget was boosted to $140 million, up 40%. Celebrities and their siblings touted the car as the "New generation of Oldsmobile" that is "not your father's Oldsmobile."

Buick in the 1989 model year rode forth as a premium motorcar to the theme, "The great American road belongs to Buick." Academy Award-winning best picture "Rain Man," featuring a 1949 Buick Roadmaster convertible, led Buick to sponsor the videocassette release, which included a specially-created 90-second spot.

Chevrolet continued to use "The heartbeat of America" theme. It also established Geo, the nameplate given cars and trucks marketed by GM but made by its Japanese-based partners Isuzu, Suzuki and Toyota.

Pontiac drove into third place in overall industry car sales, behind only Ford and Chevrolet, as it stuck with "We build excitement" for the eighth consecutive year. The division focused much of its 1988 advertising on the Grand Prix, named Motor Trend magazine's Car of the Year.

For the 1989 model year, Cadillac reversed its downsizing trend by lengthening De Ville by six inches and Fleetwood by nine. "The only way to travel is Cadillac style" remained the theme.

GMC Truck advertising, themed, "It's not just a truck any more," dropped TV in the 1989 model year, shifting an estimated $15 million to other media, primarily print.

Saturn Corp. picked creative hotshop Hal Riney & Partners as agency in May 1988, more than two years before its first model was to be introduced. The first ads could come this fall.

Chevrolet and GMC boosted regional marketing power by initiating a 1% mandatory ad charge on dealer invoices in the 1989 model year. The money was returned to dealer ad groups and individual dealers. Oldsmobile and Cadillac planned to follow suit in the 1990 model year.

Oldsmobile, Pontiac and Buick were expected to give heavy ad backing in the 1990 model year to new mid-size sedans entering their lineups. Chevrolet, Pontiac and Oldsmobile also will put emphasis on a new line of minivans, but the biggest backing probably won't come until spring, when plants are expected to be running near capacity.

Gillette Co., looking to strengthen its dominance in the $2.4 billion worldwide razor and shaver market, is focusing on its highly-profitable blade-and-razor systems at the expense of its disposable razors.

Following a narrow victory in a proxy contest that kept it independent from suitor Coniston Partners, Gillette came out slugging in December with an $80 million pan-Atlantic campaign for its Atra Plus lubricating razor system. The product, called Contour Plus in Europe, is Gillette's only ad-supported razor system in 1989.

The year-long, multimedia campaign for Atra Plus ended a two-year stall forced on by a series of takeover attempts that distracted management and drained both financial and human resources.

The takeover battles, saddling the company with $2 billion in debt, precipitated a restructuring that included the closing and consolidation of several domestic and international operations as well as extensive layoffs.

With most of the cost-cutting efforts behind it, the Boston-based company, which reduced ad spending in 1987, poured big bucks back into its ad budget in 1988. Measured media jumped about 32% in 1988 to over $85 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The massive Atra Plus campaign that stresses Gillette's shaving heritage not only proves Gillette's commitment to systems but also is designed to rebuild its image and win back younger consumers.

Gillette boosted its overall ad budget for shaving systems 45.5% in 1989 to $80 million. Another $90 million will go to promotional activities, with $10 million in ad spending in 1989 for disposables.

Gillette's only media-supported disposable is the women's Daisy Plus, a mid-1988 launch. It received a $10 million marketing budget.

Gillette is clearly banking on the "plus" market--razors that feature lubricating strips—evidenced by the phasing out of the original Daisy razor, a "plus" line extension to Good News! men's disposables and the spending surge behind Atra Plus.

Tiny competitor Wilkinson Sword USA also looked to the "plus" market to cut into Gillette's 65% share of the wet-razor market by launching in early 1989 the Ultra Glide system with a commercial that claimed superiority over Atra Plus. Gillette got an injunction against Wilkinson to stop the Ultra Glide commercial.

Gillette will introduce in 1990 what it calls a "revolutionary" shaving system, its first new shaving system in a decade. Gillette said the marketing muscle behind the new product will top $100 million.

In early 1988, Gillette boosted its ad budget for deodorants/antiperspirants by 50% to $30 million. The increase was partly to support line extensions for brands like Dry Idea and Right Guard that were experiencing market share declines. Right Guard Sport Stick, touted in commercials by sport stars like Brian Bosworth and Marvelous Marvin Hagler, got about $12 million in ad support during 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron. Dry Idea for Men got $3 million.

In the haircare segment, Gillette introduced Epic Waves in January 1989 backed by $13 million in advertising. Also in January, it relaunched Silkience shampoos and conditioners with a $20 million ad campaign, marking the first ad effort for the brand in two years.

N W Ayer, New York, in early 1988 became Gillette's No. 2 agency, behind BBDO Worldwide, when it won the Silkience, new haircare products and $25 million pan-European Aapri apricot facial scrub accounts. Foote, Cone & Belding/Europe, London, had previously handled. Gillette, in August 1988, also shifted its Myoko skincare product line to Ingalls, Quinn & Johnson, Boston, after Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos resigned the account.

Goodyear Tire & Rubber restored its advertising in 1988 to the level of expenditures in 1986 following an unsuccessful attempt by Sir James Goldsmith to acquire the company. Total advertising increased an estimated 25.9% over 1987, a year of cost-cutting, sell-offs and restructuring at Goodyear as it recovered from the debt incurred in its buyout defense.

The world's largest tire and rubber company continued consolidating operations, reorganizing into two divisions, tires and general products, each with its own manufacturing, development, financial, management and support functions.

Goodyear's realignment gives new division heads, Jacques R. Sardas (tires) and Hoyt M. Wells (general products), flexibility in decision-making. While both report to Goodyear's newly-elected CEO Tom Barrett, who succeeded retired chief Robert Mercer in January, each division head has the autonomy and authority to act on his own.

While Goodyear retained its leadership position in the $40 billion worldwide tire market with an 18.3% share, last year's merger of Bridgestone and Firestone significantly increased the pressure on Goodyear to differentiate its products and services from its competitors. In the mature, low-growth market category of tires and transportation items, advertising and promotion strategies have become more important in creating new images and building product awareness.

Goodyear's measured media ad expenditures in 1988 reached nearly $50 million, up 32%, according to LNA/Arbitron. The jump was fueled by increased spending in network TV to $20.7 million, up 47%, and magazines, $12.8 million, up from $3.8 million. Much of this was for Young & Rubicam's new "Nobody fits you like Goodyear" campaign.

Introduced in midsummer with humorous TV spots for Goodyear Certified Auto Services, which competes in the $80 billion auto service market, Y&R's campaign replaced the long-running "Goodyear, Take Me Home" theme created by former account-holder J. Walter Thompson USA, New York. During the Summer Olympics, the new campaign expanded to include TV spots for Goodyear passenger car and light truck tires.

Goodyear, in a tandem move, offered 4,600 free car-care clinics at company-owned stores and dealerships throughout the country. These were designed to spotlight Goodyear's certified auto service and nationwide warranty program.

To promote its Eagle all-season, high-performance tires, Goodyear provided 8 million brochure inserts to 10 automotive and sports magazines, as well as continuing its high-visibility involvement in Formula One, Indy Car and NASCAR auto racing. The company sponsored the development of a tire care booklet which was made available through the federal government's consumer information catalog.

Goodyear did not neglect promotional opportunities in other marketplaces. Goodyear truck trailers bearing Tirenet logo, which represents its road service program for truck fleet customers, attracted nationwide media attention when they hauled hay to drought-stricken Midwest farmers. And its sponsorship of the 1988 World Plowing Contest at the World Agricultural Expo in Amana, Iowa, garnered Goodyear exposure in the global agricultural machinery market.

Grand Metropolitan transformed itself into one of the world's leading food and beverage companies last December when it captured a reluctant Pillsbury Co. in a $5.75 billion deal.

Grand Met initiated sweeping changes at Pillsbury. Burger King, Haagen-Dazs and Pillsbury's Industrial Foods were combined into a separate division. Pillsbury's U.S. Consumer Foods business, now also a separate operating unit within Grand Met, was renamed Pillsbury Foods.

Philip Smith left as head of Pillsbury. Ian C. Martin, Grand Met's top U.S. executive, assumed the role of chairman for both Pillsbury and Burger King.

Burger King conducted its third agency review in as many years, dropping N W Ayer from its $215-million business. D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York, got brand identity or chain-image advertising and Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York, got brand retailing, short-term and product-specific advertising.

Pillsbury management also consolidated its advertising with Leo Burnett USA, moving the estimated $4.8 million account for dessert mixes, frostings and microwave products from Young & Rubicam, New York.

During 1988, Pillsbury, which pioneered microwaveable refrigerated dough, introduced microwave brownies. The brand rolled out nationally with $6.5 million in measured spending, a first step on Pillsbury's part to improve its No. 3 position in the $1.1 billion dessert-mix market. General Mills leads the category with 39% share. Procter & Gamble's Duncan Hines holds second.

Pillsbury also sought to improve its standing in the frozen vegetable category with a $9.6 million media push behind the introduction of Green Giant Gourmet vegetable side dishes.

As the frozen pizza category leader with about a 50% market share through its Jeno's and Totino's brands, Pillsbury is testing a line of "quality" frozen pizzas called Papalo's in southwestern markets. Early in 1988 Pillsbury's Godfather's Pizza chain was sold to management. Pillsbury then followed by selling Bay Street and Key West Grill restaurants to that division's management.

Pillsbury broke a $15 million TV campaign for Bennigan's, a casual-dining restaurant chain. But once under Grand Met management, Bennigan's and Steak & Ale restaurants were sold to management.

By mid-1989, two more Pillsbury units were put on the block: Bumble Bee Seafood and Van deKamp's Frozen Foods.

Grand Met's International Distillers and Vintner's U.S. units, Paddington, Carillon and Heublein, focused on the few liquor categories that are expanding. Overall U.S. liquor consumption declined 4.2%, more rapidly than it had in recent years.

Carillon's Absolut vodka, with its Peppar and Citron formulations, was the category leader in imported vodka, a segment which grew by 24% to 3.1 million cases, according to Impact, a wine and spirits newsletter. Absolut led the way with an increase of 33.5% to 1.89 million credited to its innovative advertising and promotions, according to Grand Met. Measured spending for the brand increased 19% to $7.5 million.

Heublein, which markets Smirnoff vodka, the top-selling domestic vodka in that $3 billion brand category, backed Smirnoff with $6 million in media, down 28.6%. Sales of the vodka increased 2% to 6.6 million cases, according to Market Watch. To take on the hot-selling premium imported vodkas, Smirnoff has introduced Smirnoff Silver, a premium-price brand selling for as much as 50% more than regular Smirnoff. Ad spending behind the brand should hit $10 million in 1989. Heavy media support also was provided Fosters lager at $6 million, up 11%; J&B Scotch at $6.5 million, down 15.6%, and Grad Marnier, $4.78 million, down 7.8%.Heublein's Jose Cuervo tequila is the market leader in the category, which is growing by about 4% annually. In 1988, about 4 million cases of tequila were shipped to wholesalers, according to Impact Cuervo led with 1.65 million case depletions, an increase of 16%. The No. 2 brand, Sauza, marketed by Domecq Importers, increased 22% to 605,000 cases. Measured media spending for Jose Cuervo totaled $2.6 million.

To fortify its wine and brandy business, Heublein acquired Mont La Salle Vineyard and its Christian Brothers label. The estimated $5 million account was shifted from Goodby, Berlin & Silverstein to one of Heublein's main agencies, Young & Rubicam, New York.

In 1988 Grand Met spent about $15.3 million, down 8.9%, in support of the Alpo dog food brands.

Alpo plans to launch its first branded cat food in November to replace Alpo's regional brand, Tabby, which ranked 12th among the top-selling brands in 1988, with $1 million in sales. Anticipated costs for the rollout will be about $70 million, including an undisclosed marketing fee for the use of the Garfield cat cartoon character. U.S. cat food sales climbed 3.8% in 1988 to $2.3 billion. Dog food sales only climbed 2.45% during the same period to $3.6 billion, according to John C. Maxwell, a pet food industry analyst for Wheat First Securities in Richmond, Va.

Alpo canned dog food is the category leader, with 1988 sales of $262 million, up 2.9% from $240 million. The No. 2 brand, Kal Kan Pedigree; had $200 million sales, according to Mr. Maxwell.

Alpo's Beef Flavored Dinner dog food was the third best-selling brand in 1988 with sales of $113.5 million, up 5% from $108 million. Ralston Purina's Dog Chow and Puppy Chow had higher sales. Three of its other dry brands, Hunters Choice, Jim Dandy Chunk & Ration and Alpo Puppy, were among the top 20 brands.

Pearle Vision Centers acquired two chains of vision superstores: Vision Express, which has 27 stores in the Midwest and Eye-Tech, with 38 stores in the Southwest and western states. To compete in the growing prepaid medical plan market, Pearle launched Managed Vision Care to sell Pearle Products and services to the 35 million people covered by these plans. Measured spending for Pearle was down 18.9% to $21.5 million.

Grand Met in 1988 sold the Inter-Continental Hotels subsidiary to Japan's Saison group for $2.27 billion. Cash from the sale was used to lure Pillsbury.

Hallmark Cards is reopening the competition in the mature greeting card industry as it breaks new ground with its products and advertising via Leo Burnett USA, its fourth agency in seven years.

The privately held No. 1 greeting card maker also is using characteristic caution with these moves, hedging its risks and downplaying any appearance of change.

As Hallmark rejuvenates its marketing efforts in greeting cards, it continues to invest heavily in advertising via Spanish-language broadcasting.

The $4 billion greeting card industry was relatively flat from 1985 to 1987, mainly due to a saturation of retail card outlets and higher prices for cards overall, says E. Gray Glass III, a greeting card industry analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities.

However, the industry began to grow again in 1988, and is expected to increase by approximately 3% through 1989, says Mr. Glass who believes greeting card makers are showing stronger marketing at the retail level.

Hallmark is maintaining its leadership with 40% share of the overall market. American Greetings Corp. follows with about 35%, and Gibson Greetings has 10%-12% share.

Citing the need for fresh creative approaches, in late 1988 Hallmark put its $40 million account up for review, and picked Burnett as its new agency to succeed Ogilvy & Mather, New York, which had the account for four years.

The review followed several years of agency turnover at Hallmark, beginning in 1982 when Hallmark dismissed Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, its agency for 37 years. The account had moved to Young & Rubicam, New York, for two years before it settled at O&M.

Burnett's first campaign introduced a new, secondary theme to Hallmark's advertising: "Hallmark has a way to make somebody's day," which is now being used alongside Hallmark's umbrella theme: "When you care enough to send the very best."

The new agency was given the task of nurturing a new product niche that's the first of its kind—Hallmark's "non-occasion" line of cards for children, called: "To Kids With Love."

The cards are designed to convey everyday messages of love and caring from adults to kids between 7 and 14 years old, an age group Hallmark says is 26 million strong and expected to grow 15% by the end of the next decade. Hallmark introduced the line in January 1989, with a $5 million network TV campaign created by O&M.

Hallmark stepped up its sales promotion efforts to increase card sales for occasions and holidays. In October 1988, it introduced its first video purchase-with-purchase deal for Halloween, called "Creepy Classics," which it supported with a print-and-radio campaign.

In February, it brought out a stuffed bear purchase-with-purchase offer for Valentine's Day, backed with a network spot by Burnett.

Hasbro Inc. is at a crossroads. Although it is the largest, most diversified toy company in the industry, in 1989 the man credited with bringing Hasbro to its No. 1 position—Stephen Hassenfeld—died at the age of 47.

He was replaced in May as president by his brother Alan, 41, who has a long track record with Hasbro.

Hasbro grew dramatically through the 1980s, but that momentum slowed in 1987 and 1988. Analysts predicted that 1989 sales would be relatively flat because of no runaway toy hit. And by late 1989, Hasbro looked as if it would have another average year.

Hasbro made several moves in 1989 aimed at invigorating sales. It added a second agency to its roster to join Griffin Bacal, New York, which has been principal agency on its $100 million account for years.

Hasbro had consolidated the entire account at Griffin Bacal, New York in early 1988 after dismissing DDB Needham, Chicago, but in mid-1989 it opened up a review to several agencies for $20 million in billings for its girls' toys and some Milton Bradley board games. Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor, New York, won the review.

Hasbro's game plan in 1989 also called for acquisitions—central to its growth strategy throughout the 1980s—and the addition of new products and line extensions to existing brand names.

Hasbro's gained the assets of bankrupt Coleco Industries, including the Cabbage Patch Kids doll line and Scrabble, the veteran board game that has churned out sales for decades without any signficant advertising.

Although Cabbage Patch was a hit in the early 1980s, the line had wilted in recent years. Hasbro moved to revive it in the fall 1989 with a $7 million TV campaign via Griffin Bacal, themed: "A special kind of love."

The rejuvenation of Cabbage Patch is part of Hasbro's emerging philosophy: strong toy brands can have long-lasting value if nurtured by consistent advertising and marketing.

Such examples of that strategy are G.I. Joe, its boys' action figure doll that has produced solid sales for several years, along with TransFormers and My Little Pony, its girls' toy line.

But Hasbro also is taking risks on new product entries, such as the new battery-operated super-fast cars, which burst upon the U.S. toy industry in 1989 after creating a sensation in Japan. Hasbro debuted Record Breakers, its super-fast cars, in September 1989, with a strong TV campaign and plans to support the line through 1990.

Several other Hasbro attempts at launching new products have not met with much success. Its behind-the-scenes plan to develop a videogame in 1988 was a $20 million flop, and Maxie—the fashion doll Hasbro launched amid much fanfare in 1988 to compete with Mattel's Barbie—has yielded lackluster sales.

Diversification remains the key to its success, and Hasbro continues to spread its efforts between core toys and its Milton Bradley and Playskool divisions.

In addition to selling its first videogames for use with the Nintendo Entertainment System, in 1989 the Milton Bradley games division launched "Trump: The Game," along with another board game called "Scattergories," targeting adult audiences.

Playskool continues to produce excellent sales for Hasbro, and in 1989 it broadened its practical and promotional toys to include a plush Gumby, whose license Hasbro acquired in 1988.

H.J. Heinz is eying growth in foreign markets and is increasing promotion of its biggest advertised brand, Weight Watchers, to the health-conscious.

Heinz is formulating a worldwide blueprint to respond to the U.S.-Canada trade agreement, the upcoming integrated European Community market of 1992 and the emergence of economic liberalism in Eastern Europe. As a prelude, 48 varieties from the Weight Watchers line were moved in 1988 onto the Continent under the Geniesserplan brand, and Weight Watchers' frozen meals entered the U.K.

Heinz continued to bulk up with acquisitions: Canada's W.P. Foods (frozen unbaked pie and tart shells), Shady Maple Farms Ltd. (maple syrup) and the Fitness Institute (a fitness and exercise club).

Weight Watchers established a unified marketing strategy even though products are handled by separate Heinz units and ad agencies. TV spokeswoman Lynn Redgrave is the focal point. Rather than pitch only frozen entrees and desserts, the brand's largest ad spenders, she promotes the entire line.

Measured spending for Weight Watchers rose 54% to $47.4 million, according to LNA/Arbitron. TV claimed $38.8 million of that, up 61.7%.

New Weight Watchers products include Ultimate 90 yogurt, chocolate mousse on a stick, six additional frozen entrees, four new Mexican varieties and two more frozen desserts. Heinz also bought back the license to Weight Watchers margarine, cheese, mayonnaise, spoonable salad dressings and other such products from Nutrition Industries Corp.

Weight Watchers holds a 13% market share of frozen sweet goods, up from 10%, according to Jane Shickich, analyst with Prudential Bache. Top competitors, Sara Lee at 40% market share and Pepperidge Farm, at 11%, are non-diet. In the frozen dinner category, the company reports Weight Watchers has overtaken leader Stouffer's Lean Cuisine, though figures are unavailable.

The pet food segment, because of its rapid growth, was spun off from Heinz' seafood unit in 1988. The resulting units: Heinz Pet Products Co. and Star Kist Seafood Co.

In the $900 million canned dog food market, Ms. Shickich said Heinz' multi-brand listing had increased approximately 1% to a 16% share on volume growth of 4%. Mars' Kal Kan holds 20.1%, up from 19% and Grand Met USA's Alpo is still No. 1 with 21.8%, down from 23%.

Nine Lives' somewhat surly Morris the Cat is transformed, in a $15 million campaign from Leo Burnett USA, into a lovable family pet that follows its master to school. The campaign featured new can sizes. TV spending grew 47% to $9 million for the 9 Lives canned product; total brand spending fell 16.7% to $9.2 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Heinz, with a 21.8% share of the overall cat food market, ranked third at yearend, behind Purina at 28.4% and Carnation at 23.7%. Company officials said in December, though, that acquisitions had moved Heinz to No. 2.

Four Heinz brands—9 Lives, Amore, Kozy Kitten and Petuna—combined for a 29.9% share in the canned cat food segment, still at the top of the category, though down from 33%. Kal Kan has 18% of the wet segment, down from 19%; Nestle's Carnation's Friskies 17%, up from 14%. In semi-moist, Ralston Purina's Tender Vittles leads with 49% and 22.9% for Happy Cat; 9 Lives Tender Meals earns 15.3%. Heinz' share of the dry market with its Crunchy Meals is 7.4%; Purina Cat Chow 16.3%; Carnation's Friskies 14.5%; Purina Meow Mix 11.2% and Mars' Crave 8.1%.

Media spending for Heinz Ketchup grew to $17.3 million, a 56% increase largely attributed to promotion of the revamped 64-oz. Ketchup Lovers' plastic bottle, now with a handle. Heinz holds a 55% share, down a share point from 1987's record high; Hunt's has 19% and Del Monte 9%.

Heinz 57 Sauce saw heftier media spending of $6.8 million, up 42%. Network TV rose from zero to $2.5 million. New Heinz USA products include Good 'N Spicy and Good 'N Garlic pickles, a 10-oz. size of dill relish and Chico-San Popcorn Cakes.

Ore-Ida posted another hefty ad increase. Regular french fries spending rose six-fold to $3.9 million, and microwave fries grew 253% to $4.4 million. Ore-Ida market shares in the frozen potato category dipped three points to 53%.

Star Kist Seafood rolled out Prime Catch, which is a quality light tuna, a reduced-salt Weight Watchers brand and a salt-restricted dietetic variety under the StarKist name. StarKist holds a 37% market share, up from 36%, followed by Ralston Purina's Chicken of the Sea at 19%, down from 20%, and Grand Met's Bumble Bee, also 20%.

Hershey Foods Corp. finally grabbed the candy market lead from Mars Inc. in 1988 with the acquisition of the U.S. confectionery operations of Cadbury Schweppes PLC's and from strong new-product introductions.

Led by Cadbury and its Mounds, Almond Joy and York Peppermint Pattie—all among the U.S. 20 best-selling candy bars—Hershey has achieved a 20.4% share of the U.S. confectionery market, valued at almost $8 billion at the wholesale level.

Competitors Mars and Suchard/Brach hold 18.4% and 7.3% shares, respectively. In the candy bar market, about 65% of the confectionery market, Hershey leads with 44% to Mars' 37%.

Hershey turned to sales promotion to help build its lead. Holding media ad spending basically even, Hershey hiked its promotional budget 34.5% worldwide. Hershey distributed 750,000 full-size candy bars on 170 college campuses for sampling, and placed a 30-second spot for Hershey's kisses at the beginning of the home video release of "Princess Bride."

To focus on its confectionery businesses, Hershey sold its 840-chain Friendly Ice Cream restaurant division in August 1988, to Tennessee Restaurant Corp.

Candy bar launches included Bar None, supported with $6.6 million in measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron. Its first-year sales moved it into the U.S. top 30 candy bars. Symphony, a bar that went into test in California in 1988, will roll national later this year. 5th Avenue, a candy bar acquired with Ludens, went national in 1988, supported with $4.5 million in measured spending.

Hershey's heaviest single brand measured spending was for Kit Kat bar, with slightly more than $9 million, up 29%.

During the year, Hershey shifted its Cadbury brands from Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, to its existing agencies: DDB Needham Worldwide received York Peppermint Patties, Caramello and all Cadbury brand bars.

Ogilvy & Mather, New York, got Mounds and Almond Joy and Cadbury's creme-filled chocolate eggs. Hershey also moved its Hershey Pasta business from regional shop Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, New York, to Weightman Group, Philadelphia.

This year, Hershey began to test a refrigerated chocolate pudding. Hershey's varieties bear the names of its best-selling chocolate bars. The new line goes head-to-head with Kraft General Foods USA's Jello-O Pudding Snacks, which holds 53% of the $156.3 million pudding market that has more than doubled in past two years.

American Honda Motor Co., a subsidiary of Honda Motor Co. Ltd., Tokyo, maintained its lead among Japanese car makers supplying the U.S. market, as it prepared for luxury car competition from fellow countrymen and pushed to revive motorcycle sales.

Honda is readying a variety of 1990 car models, four of which may replace the current line of Accords. It also has kicked off a massive $75 million "Come Ride With Us" campaign to expand its shrinking U.S. motorcycle sales.

Honda's market share for 1988 U.S.-built and import cars (including Acura) was 7.26%, up from 7.22%. That kept it

One Way Of Buying Research.

A new era beckons. The time honored practice of multi-bidding every research job is near extinction. And for good reason. Time after time, you waste both money and manpower in buying your research. With research staffs shrinking and workloads growing, can you really afford doing business that way?

It's no wonder research directors have consolidated entire programs, not just projects, with a select list of research companies. But, therein lies the rub. Along with saving time and confusion, comes major risk. Can you invest your entire faith in the companies you ultimately select?

If the choice is M/A/R/C, the answer is a resounding yes. With the most comprehensive scope of research services in the industry, we can execute virtually any research assignment. Technically, with flawless precision. And expertly, with a client-experienced, marketing-oriented staff. The sum total of which won't yield data the size of a mountain. Only the insights that could move one.

And while we've earned a repu-

ahead of Toyota at 6.50%; Nissan, 4.46%; Hyundai, 2.50% and Mazda, 2.42%.

Honda, the first Japanese automaker to assemble cars in the U.S., plans to increase auto sales in this country to 1 million annually by 1992. Sales of 300,000 upscale Acuras are expected to be part of that total. Honda has put on hold plans to expand its Acura dealer association from 285 to 350 by the end of this year because shipments of the car from Japan remain slow due to trade quota restrictions amid heavy consumer demand.

Honda, also the first Japanese company to export a car to Japan, shipped 4,000 Accords from its Marysville, Ohio plant in 1988. The goal is to export 50,000 of the U.S.-made cars to Japan per year by 1991.

Measured media expenditures for 1988 show the best-selling Accord models (114,629 units sold from $11,770 to $15,920) accounted for the major portion of ad support given the Honda line. Its measured spending was $36 million, 65% of it in network and spot TV. The Civic/CRX models (97,962 units sold from $6,385 to $20,930) drew about the same, most of it on network TV and magazines. The Prelude, which sold 52,541 units priced from $13,945 to $18,450, accounted for another $12 million in measured media.

But the Acura line of luxury autos accounted for the lion's share of Honda's 1988 ad budget. Measured media figures show Acura with total expenditures of $56.7 million, about $40 million of which was earmarked to the top-of-the-line Legend, priced at $22,000 to $30,000. Acura's lower-priced Integra models ($11,260 to $15,950) accounted for the remainder.

Acura, currently the only Japanese importer of luxury cars, will lose that distinction this fall when Toyota and Nissan begin selling their upscale cars, the Lexus and Infiniti, respectively.

Acura's response to Lexus and Infiniti will arrive next year with the introduction of a mid-engine sports car, priced $40,000 to $50,000, and assume the flagship status now held by the Legend.

Spending for the Acura division will be up about 30% for the 1989 calendar year, to between $70 million and $80 million, notes the company. U.S. motorcycle sales have declined every year for the past five, from the market's last high of 1.3 million units in 1984 to about 710,000 in 1988. Rising prices have been a factor, with a small 125-cc Honda now selling for $2,100 and the big 1,500-cc Honda Gold Wing touring bike priced at $11,500.

Honda still leads in the shrinking market even though its share dropped to 40.7% from 50.8% in 1987. Industry figures through March 1989, show further losses, down to a 29% share. All major competitors during 1988 achieved market share gains, however. Yamaha was second at 21.5% (up from 19.8%), followed by Suzuki at 13.7% (up from 11.6%), Kawasaki at 12.7% (up from 10.2%) and Harley-Davidson at 9.8% (up from 6.3%).

Hyundai Motor America, the U.S. sales arm of the South Korean car-maker that rose to the No. 4 auto importer in the U.S. by the end of 1988, has stumbled temporarily in trying to move up in class.

Hyundai dealers have been hard hit since early 1989 by falling sales, largely due to delayed and inadequate shipments of the more upscale 1989 Sonata and some ill-timed advertising for its launch last fall.

Sales for the first six months of 1989 are expected to be about 100,000 units, down 32% from mid-year levels in 1988. Hyundai has scaled back projected sales of 300,000 to 220,000 units for 1989. Of the total, Sonata sales have been revised from 80,000 to 40,000. Forecasts call for sales of 350,000 cars in 1990.

Some of the once-exclusive Hyundai outlets are converting to dual dealerships, concessions unheard of from a company that four years ago sifted through thousands of dealer applications and required standalone facilities costing millions.

Hyundai, which increased its ad support 25% in 1988, earned a 2.50% share of the total U.S. auto market in 1988, down from 2.58% the prior year. American Honda led importers with a 7.26% share of the overall auto market. Hyundai also is trying to hold its market share by pushing consumer rebates and dealer cash and incentive programs.

The front-wheel-drive Sonata represents Hyundai's first step toward becoming a full-line marketer. The 2.4-liter sedan, priced from $9,695 to $11,695 (compared with $5,500 for the Excel), is positioned against such imports as Toyota Camry, Honda Accord and Mazda 626.

By 1990, Hyundai will market three lines: the compact-to-mid-size Sonata; a new generation sub-compact Excel to debut this fall; and a sporty coupe, built on the Excel platform, to be launched in early 1990.

Hyundai's dealer expansion program currently is on hold. After plans to go from 280 dealers in 42 states to 350 in all 48 contiguous states in 1989, the company will close out the year with 325 dealers who made an average investment of $2.9 million per outlet.

Dealer relations were bruised early this year with news that Chrysler Motors' Jeep-Eagle outlets will get their own version of the Sonata. An annual supply of 30,000 units will come from Hyundai's Bromont, Quebec assembly plant, denying U.S. dealers exclusive rights to that model.

Dealers had counted on Sonata to draw fresh showroom traffic after three years of selling essentially the same model of the subcompact Excel. They even lack exclusivity with the Excel: Mitsubishi Motor Sales of America currently takes annual shipment of 30,000 Excels, which it calls the Precis.

Such supply situations are the result of cross-ownership and multiple partners. Chrysler owns a 25% share of Mitsubishi and Mitsubishi holds a 15% share in Hyundai. Gaining a Korean model is a small step in Chrysler's attempt to broaden the appeal of its Jeep-Eagle division.

AA's advertising estimates for Hyundai exclude $26 million spending by local dealers, but include the corporate co-op portion of $38.4 million spent by the Hyundai dealers association. These expenditures were in spot TV and newspapers, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Dealers were further handicapped by bad timing of a national ad campaign last fall. Hyundai broke a campaign during the Olympic telecasts from Seoul in September that featured new commercials for Excel, corporate spots and an announcement that the Sonata would be "Coming Nov. 14." However, because of a two-month strike in the summer of 1988, the Sonata arrived much later. Hyundai executives admit the launch did not go well.

Current monthly shipments of 4,000 to 4,500 Sonatas still lag projections of 8,000. Dealers are told availability will improve this fall when Hyundai Motor America nears full production of the car at the Quebec plant.

International Business Machines was back in the driver's seat in 1988 with successful product introductions. And a new focus on solutions-based advertising surfaced early in 1989 in ads from Lintas:New York and Wells, Rich, Greene, New York. IBM's two new agencies.

New TV spots from WRG aired in April 1989 featuring actors representing IBM customers, who describe a problem and then explain how IBM solved it. Print ads, photographed by Richard Avedon, follow a similar approach. Analysts call the ad strategy a good one.

"Solutions advertising is a lot more sensible than what they had," says Brian Jeffrey, managing director of International Technology Group, Los Altos, Calif. "Dropping the 'M*A*S*H' characters was a thoroughly good idea."

Solutions advertising is replacing "The Bigger Picture" slogan, which was the heart of IBM's measured $33 million in corporate general spending in 1988. That total was down 16% from 1987.

IBM also is using "When you're thinking ahead, you're thinking IBM," which closes its newest commercials for Personal System 2. That system accounted for IBM's single biggest expenditure in 1988 with $36 million in measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron.

In the $28.7 billion U.S. market for personal computers, IBM held a 15.9% revenue share in 1988, vs. a 29.7% share of an $18.5 billion PC market in 1987. No. 2 Apple Computer held a 12.4% share in 1988, down from 14% in 1987, according to San Jose, Calif.-based Dataquest.

Analysts say IBM lost control of the original PC market when clone-makers duplicated IBM technology to create lower-cost compatible machines. Together, IBM clone makers, led by Compaq Computer Corp. with a 7% share of the PC market in 1988, now control more than double IBM's share of PC sales.

However, IBM is fighting back with the development of proprietary Micro Channel architecture, which IBM hopes to establish as a new industry standard.

The clone-makers are expected to fight back when the Compaq-led Extended Industry Standard Architecture (EISA) group of nine PC-compatible makers introduces its first versions of a rival PC standard later this year.

Jay P. Stevens, analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds, New York, predicts IBM will win the battle to become the standard for the new 32-bit operating systems.

"We expect Micro Channel to be the winner (over EISA) because the first company to introduce a product usually is the one that wins," he says. Mr. Steven's on-going "intention to buy" surveys of large end-users indicate that IBM has been gaining more than its share of planned PC purchases since February 1989, he says.

"Through all of 1988, IBM had steadily lost ground to Compaq and Apple Computer Corp. in planned purchases, bottoming out in January 1989. Since February, IBM has been coming back nicely," he adds.

IBM also has reason for optimism in mini and super-minicomputers with the introduction in June 1988 of the Applications System 400 series. AS/400 complements the larger IBM 9370 Information System, which IBM began shipping in March 1988, by permitting enhanced communications capabilities throughout the IBM line, analysts say.

AS/400 received $12 million in 1988 measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron. A new campaign for AS/400 was launched early in 1989 by WRG.

IBM's share of the $3 billion market for minicomputers grew to 37% in 1988 from 25.7% in 1987. IBM's share of the $3.2 billion market for super-minis grew to 36.5%, up from 30.6% in 1987.

In the $11.7 billion market for corporate mainframes, IBM still leads with a 52.6% share of revenue, compared with 68.3% in 1987.

IBM moved all product advertising to Lintas:New York and corporate advertising to WRG, New York, in September 1988. Both accounts previously had been handled at Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein, New York. Media buying for both print and TV also went to Lintas:New York from LGFE.

ITT is no longer the quintessential conglomerate, and its new advertising reflects its more compact look.

Early this month, ITT unveiled new ads with tag line: "Building Businesses into Leaders." The campaign is appropriate if, perhaps, 18 months late. Company executives began concentrating full time on that task in 1988.

Today's ITT is far from the conglomerate built by Harold Geneen in the 1960s and early 1970s. Rand V. Araskog, chairman-CEO, spent much of the last five years selling off such groups as baked goods, cosmetics and consumer appliances while fine-tuning others.

ITT's advertising declined an estimated 18% in 1988, largely the result of reduced spending at Hartford Insurance Group, ITT's biggest unit. Reflecting the general downturn in the domestic insurance industry, Hartford cut its measured spending to $6.5 million, a drop of 40%, as total insurance premium revenues remained level with the prior year. The company's other major advertiser that showed a decline in year-to-year spending was its business and technical schools, which drew $6.1 million in 1988, down 8.3%.

Sheraton Hotels remained ITT's biggest spender. The chain received about $18 million in measured media, up 7.8%. The group continued its strong performance, and opened major new hotels in Long Beach, Calif. and in Australia, China and Japan.

Johnson & Johnson generated considerable new product growth in each of its three business sectors in 1988, but its bid for dominance in the external sanitary protection market failed when it withdrew from its bid to take over Playtex Family Products.

There may still be pressures on J&J "to increase critical mass" with the heavy consolidation in the pharmaceutical industry, says Robert Goldman, analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds.

"Certainly, Johnson & Johnson is looking to move its ethical pharmaceutical business into the consumer segment," says Mr. Goldman, noting that many pharmaceutical companies are scheduled to lose patent protection on dozens of major products in the 1990s. To that end, J&J formed a joint venture with Merck & Co., the world's largest pharmaceutical company, to develop and market consumer versions of prescription drugs.

Imodium A-D, introduced in 1988, is the result of a joint development effort between J&J's McNeil Consumer Products, makers of Tylenol, and Janssen Pharmaceutical, maker of Imodium, the U.S.'sleading anti-diarrheal prescription.

In the consumer sector, the company credits the introduction of Imodium A-D and new adult Tylenol products, especially Tylenol gelcaps, with boosting 1988 sales 8.7%.

McNeil continues to lead the $2.4 billion analgesic market where its Tylenol brand, an acetaminophen, is estimated to have a 30% share of market, down from 33% in 1987, analysts say.

Acetaminophen and aspirin products account for 40% each of the pain killer market while ibuprofen accounts for 20%.

Key competitors are American Home Products Corp.'s Advil, an ibuprofen, with a 12% share of the analgesics market and Sterling Drug's Bayer aspirin and Bristol-Myers' Excedrin aspirin products, each with 7%.

Total Tylenol ad spending was $65 million, up 16.7%. Advil was the next largest analgesics advertiser at $47.4 million. Tylenol gelcaps gained momentum via a $16 million ad campaign with the line: "It's not a capsule, it's better." The campaign claims the gelcaps are 33% smaller than capsules.

Of the Tylenol total, Regular Strength Pain Reliever rose to $40 million in media support, up from $17.6 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

McNeil introduced in 1988 Tylenol Cold, a new name and new package for the no-drowsiness formula cold products, formerly known as CoTylenol. Ad budget over the product's two lives remains flat.

New Tylenol Extra Strength Antacid debuted last November as a new entry being tested in the effervescent antacid field supported by TV spots themed: "It makes fast work of an upset stomach." Miles' Alka-Seltzer owns 13% of the total $870 million antacid category. If the new Tylenol product is rolled out nationally, it will be the first effervescent antacid to debut nationally since the 1960s.

McNeil also cut Medipren's ad budget 16.4% to $30 million in 1988. The ibuprofen product holds 2.5% of the total analgesic market and 13% of the ibuprofen market. Advil has a lock on the ibuprofen market with 50% share, followed by Nuprin 21% and Pden Medipren. New Sine-Aid Maximum Strength tablets and capsules were introduced with $3.8 million in ad support as spending shifted out of Sine-Aid Sinus Remedy. Total Sine-Aid ad expenditures rose 26.8% to $6 million.

J&J's introduced Purpose lotion, which combines a moisturizer with a sunscreen, as a cooperative effort of J&J's Baby Products Co. and Ortho Pharmaceutical's dermatological division.

J&J sees Purpose as a strong tie-in candidate with Retin-A, Ortho Pharmaceutical's prescription product for the topical treatment of acne. Retin-A dries the skin and makes it more susceptible to sunburn.

Dean Witter's Mr. Goldman also sees Sundown sunscreen as another companion product for Retin-A. J&J introduced Sundown in March 1989, with a $14 million launch.

Once J&J gets anti-cancer approval from the Food & Drug Administration for its Retin-A, it is expected to develop it on a mass market basis similar to Imodium A-D. The FDA has approved Ortho's marketing of a new low-dose Retin-A prescription cream for acne treatment.

J&J's personal products division still holds the lead in external sanitary protection at 37% of retail sales in 1988 against intense competition from Procter & Gamble's Always brand at 26% and Kimberly-Clark's Kotex line at 24%.

A convenient dispenser package for Care Free Panty Shields was introduced in 1988, receiving $8.2 million in ad support, up 25%. The total ad budget for sanitary products was slashed from $33.7 million in 1987 to $15.7 million. Sure and Natural maxi-pads spending was cut from $9.3 million in 1987 to under $200,000 in 1988.

Po-Boys?

Not quite. Even the man on the street can eat like a king In New Orleans. Whether the fare is a po-boy sandwich or blackened redfish, New Orleanians add a rich, unique flavor to the words "home cooking."

So it's not suprising that New Orleanians spend a higher percentage of their income on food than city dwellers anywhere else in the United States.* If you'd like an introduction to these insatiable appetites, call Lester Key at (504) 826-3000.

IT'S A NO-COMPARISON COMPARISON.

Comparing our new DVC Evertite™ Binder with an ordinary binder is like comparing apples with oranges. Or apples with prunes, if you think about the wrinkles.

Ordinary binders have heat sealed edges that trap air inside, causing wrinkles, bubbles and sags.

The incredible new DVC binder uses a revolutionary process to glue a super-thin vinyl to its base, bonding it so a heat-sealed vacuum is created that prevents air from entering. Result? No wrinkling, sagging, or bubbling. No comparison.

Our binder stays firm and tight, in transit to your customer and on your customer's shelf. It's a superior product, with a longer life - and the 10-day DVC shipment guarantee. The price is extraordinary, too - lower than the competition!

Compare the new DVC Evertite™ Binder with any other binder. There's just no comparison.

S.C. Johnson & Son spent 1988 developing new niches for its well-established product lines and spinning off subsidiaries it felt had plateaued.

Divestitures included Johnson's 50% stake in Rydelle-Lion that went to Japan's Lion Corp. this June; Glade Litterfresh, a powdered cat-box deodorizer, to Edward Lowe Industries in February 1989; and Fiberall bulk-laxative line to Ciba-Geigy Corp. in August 1988.

The Rydelle-Lion joint venture was set up in 1985 to market Lion's Zact smokers toothpaste and Check-Up antiplaque and anti-gingivitis toothpastes and chewing gum, acquired by Johnson from Minnetonka Corp. in 1987. Both Zact and Check-Up each hold less than 1% share of the $1 billion toothpaste category.

Aveeno and Rhuli skincare products, and 9-1-1, a line of first aid creams and sprays testing on the West Coast, have been folded into Johnson's personal-care products division, though Rydelle still remains a Johnson subsidiary. "We're not sure what we'll do with Rydelle," says James May, corporate public relations manager.

Johnson's search for a major agency to handle virtually all its U.S. consumer products advertising ended May 1989, with the consolidation of $90 million in billings at longtime Johnson agency Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago. The reassignment of $40 million in billings capped two years of agency switching by Johnson and epitomizes its plan to streamline operations in the U.S. and overseas.

Losing out were J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago, which had Soft Sense and Edge, and Lotas Minard Patton McIver, New York, which handled Halsa, Curel and Agree. Pledge and Glade were unassigned since mid-1988, when the brands were abruptly removed from Dawson Johns & Black, Chicago.

Johnson's Pledge furniture polish led the home-care division in measured media with $8.9 million, double its support from 1987. Pledge commands an estimated 40% of the $145 million (manufacturers' level) furniture wax and polish category.

Between Future and Brite, the No. 2 and 3 brands, respectively, Johnson holds an estimated 60% share of the $96.2 million (manufacturers' level) floor-care category, one that has been declining at a rate of 3% annually, noted Kline & Co. consultant Gregory Good. Measured support behind Future declined 10.4% to $1.6 million in 1988, while support for Brite doubled to $3.5 million.

Glade, Johnson's air freshener line, received more than $3 million in measured media spending in 1988, a sharp contrast to 1987 when the company spent only $140,000 in media. Glade retained an estimated 14% of the $300 million (manufacturers' level) air freshener category aided by strong introductory sales of Glade Potpourri aerosol spray.

Johnson in April broke a $10 million campaign introducing Raid Max, a premium line of insecticides aimed directly at American Cyanamid Co.'s Combat in the $500 million business. Raid has 48% of the category to a climbing 22% for Combat. The Raid line received more than $16 million in media spending in 1988, up 23%.

Category sales of insect repellent are expected to jump 10% to $55 million in 1989, driven by a rebounding mosquito population and fear of Lyme disease, which is transmitted by ticks. Johnson's Off! line has more than a 50% share of the category.

In the haircare market, which grew 7% to $4.2 billion in 1988, Johnson slipped to an overall 3.8% share in shampoos and 5.2% in conditioners (supermarket sales only), according to Diana Temple, a Salomon Bros. analyst.

Ad support for Halsa dwindled from more than $13 million in 1985 to virtually nothing in 1987. Last September, Johnson broke a new $5 million TV and print campaign for Halsa to thwart further share erosion. Halsa shampoo's 1988 share dropped to 2.0% of the $1.36 billion (supermarket sales) segment, while the companion conditioner fell to a 2.4% share of the $610 million conditioner segment (supermarket sales) from almost a 3.4% share in 1987.

The company in January 1989, broke a $4 million TV and print campaign for new keratin-enriched Agree shampoo and hair conditioner. Agree shampoo in 1988 had only a 1.8% share of supermarket dollar sales, while the conditioner held a 2.7% share, according to Ms. Temple.

Johnson in April 1989, introduced Soft Sense Shave Gel, a shaving product aimed at women and positioned as providing a clean shave with less irritation than other shaving products. The product is viewed both as a line extension to Soft Sense body lotion brand and a boost to Johnson's overall share of the $250 million (supermarket sales) shaving preparation category. Edge, whose patent expired, doubled its measured spending to $2.5 million in 1988. It remained category leader at 27%.

Johnson introduced Edge Soothing After Shave with Aloe, the first mass-marketed after-shave product to be formulated without alcohol.

Johnson, the third-ranked hand lotion marketer, in 1988 held a 10.2% share for its Curel and Soft Sense brands in the estimated $641 million (supermarket sales) category, down from 12.3%. Johnson supported the brands with $4 million in measured media in 1988, down 20%.

The company in December 1988, named 38-year Johnson veteran, Raymond F. Farley its president-CEO. Samuel C. Johnson, former CEO, remains chairman.

Kellogg Co. continues to increase its marketing expenditures between 15% and 25% annually to boost its commanding lead in ready-to-eat cereals.

A measure of the market's competitiveness was Kellogg's move to free up dollars for a major marketing push in 1989 by allowing its per-share earnings to decline during the first quarter, during the first quarter, and boost spending on cereals 25.2% in 1988 to $369.1 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The world's largest cereal maker ended 1988 with a 41.4% share of the $6 billion ready-to-eat cereal market, up from 41.1%, said County NatWest Securities analyst Timothy Ramey. For 1988, General Mills had a 21.3% share; General Foods USA's Post, 12%; Quaker Oats Co., 8.3%; Ralston Purina Co., 5.4% and Nabisco Brands, 5.4%.

Determined to increase U.S. annual per-capita cereal consumption beyond the current 9.8 pounds, Kellogg is trying three tactics. First, it has launched ad campaigns positioning such products as Frosted Flakes as snack foods, to build up non-breakfast consumption, now an estimated 15% to 20% of the total.

Second, to boost breakfast consumption, it is rolling out Smart Start cereal bars. The products, which were moved into the western U.S. this summer, are oven-baked bars made of five Kellogg cereals: Common Sense Oat Bran, Corn Flakes, Nutri-Grain (two varieties), Raisin Bran and Rice Krispies, all positioned as breakfast food for the family on the go.

Third, Kellogg continues to add new products and tinker with established ones. The company has introduced two blockbusters the past year: Common Sense Oat Bran and S.W. Graham cold cereals, with a combined ad budget of $40 million.

Riding the crest of the oat bran craze, Common Sense chalked up a 0.3% market share during a partial year of distribution in 1988, but already is treading at a 2% share through 1989, said Wheat First Securities analyst John C. Maxwell Jr. Industry watchers speculate that Common Sense will be Kellogg's next "umbrella" brand name, aside Nutri-Grain; already in 1989 the concept has been extended to a variety of Eggo frozen waffles.

Kellogg's other new products have been carefully placed line extensions. To the Nutri-Grain family it added Nutri-Grain Biscuits and Raisin Bran. A bite-size version was added to Frosted Mini-Wheats, Blueberry Squares were added to the Shredded Wheat line, and the Nut & Honey brand got Crunch Biscuits and O's. Nutri-Grain line (cereal, bars, frozen waffles) drew $29 million in media, while Nut & Honey pulled $16.7 million.

Behind Kellogg's heavy commitment to marketing is Horst Schroeder, 48, named Kellogg Co. president-chief opereting officer in November. He is seen as the successor to Chairman-CEO William LaMothe, who likely will retire in 1991.

In the past year's only account shift at Kellogg, Crispix and All-Bran, with a combined $10 million billings, were moved to Leo Burnett USA from Kellogg's other agency, J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago.

K mart Corp. spent much of the past year implementing its diversification strategy, opening its first stores in various new grocery and warehouse-style retail operations and launching or continuing several key image-building marketing programs for its 2,200-plus K mart stores.

K mart, the No. 2 retailer, is working hard to stave off competition on two fronts: No. 1 Sears, Roebuck & Co. this year kicked off a major, company-wide restructuring that called for a switch to "everyday low prices"; and No. 3 Wal-Mart Stores, characterized by industry analysts as the nation's fastest-growing retailer, is expanding rapidly and experimenting with wholesale clubs, hypermarkets and supercenters.

Even though Sears racked up comparatively high sales gains in the months immediately following the launch of its new pricing strategy, K mart resisted short-term, defensive marketing moves beyond its own price-cutting measures that have been phased in since mid-1987. K mart did step up its price-reduction program by cutting prices on 500 items in fall 1988 and on another 3,000 items in early 1989, for a total of everyday low prices on 6,000 key products. Sears' sudden gains were temporary.

The company also relied on longer-term marketing programs, such as the second phase of its lifestyle-oriented home fashions advertising with food and entertainment expert Martha Stewart, and a major promotional tie-in with CBS-TV.

K mart has been taking a hard look at its ad budget over the past 18 months. Last year it scaled back its in-house newspaper insert ad program, dropping one of its two weekly inserts, and diverted about $45 million into other media, primarily TV. The company also is testing once-a-month circulars in Pueblo, Colo. This year K mart intends to cut $25 million from its ad budget.

K mart is out to develop an image as a retailer of quality, brand-name merchandise priced competitively. That strategy calls for less emphasis on prices of individual items, and more on image advertising that positions K mart as a "category merchant," selling entire lifestyle-oriented concepts to consumers.

Last Christmas K mart broke its biggest-ever holiday marketing campaign, based on the "Christmas in America" photography book by Collins Publishing. The multimedia campaign consisted of 12 TV commericals, print ads, outdoor boards, newspaper inserts, 125 million shopping bags and extensive in-store support.

That was followed in February by the $20 million "At home with Martha Stewart" program, a massive co-op marketing blitz with Family Circle magazine. The program consisted of 43 commercials in which Ms. Stewart used products sold at K mart to renovate and redecorate her 151-year-old Connecticut farmhouse. Newspaper insert ads and a consumer sweepstakes supported.

TV spots mentioned brand name products; 37 manufacturers helped fund the co-op program. The program also included an unusual combination of advertorial and editorial features by Ms. Stewart in Family Circle and Better Homes & Gardens.

K mart introduced a new Martha Stewart signature line of products, starting with three bed linen sets. This fall it will introduce Martha Stewart-designed tabletop products.

In May, K mart and CBS-TV outlined one of the largest promotional undertakings ever, the "CBS/K mart Get Ready Giveaway" sweepstakes to promote CBS' fall TV schedule and to increase traffic in K mart stores. CBS and K mart are expected to spend a combined $20 million on the program. (NBC-TV and Sears have a similar fall tie-in).

Management of the K mart account has shifted from Ross Roy Inc. to sister agency Calet, Hirsch & Spector. Both agencies still work together on the creative.

K mart also is putting heavier emphasis on specialty retailing, expected to account for 25% of sales and 20% of profits by 1990. Specialty retail businesses include American Fare hypermarkets; its chain of Makro stores, of which K mart owns 51%; Walden Book Co.; Pay Less Drug Stores Northwest and its Builders Square subsidiary, which operates Office Square and Sports Giant stores. Last year K mart opened 154 new specialty stores.

In January 1989, K mart opened its first American Fare hypermarket, a joint venture with Bruno's, a leading Southeastern grocery chain. The new store, a 244,000 sq. ft. facility in Atlanta, combines food and general merchandise, and carries "everyday low prices" on all 45,000 items in the store. A second store is planned for Charlotte, N.C., later this year. K mart plans to test a "power retail center," where one shopping center would contain several K mart specialty outlets.

K mart's Walden Books Co. this summer moved its estimated $8 million Walden books store account from Ally & Gargano to CHC Advertising, Westport, Conn., where Bill Bishop, former president of A&G, landed after resigning.

After devoting much of 1988 to a massive corporate restructuring that saw media advertising dip 22.5%, Kroger Co. is now focusing on generating as much cash as possible to reduce its mountain of debt.

The Cincinnati-based grocery retailer, the nation's largest in sales, launched a $4.5 billion restructuring last September as it turned away unsolicited takeover bids from the Haft, owners of a Maryland-based retailing concern, and Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., the New York buyout firm that gained control of RJR Nabisco earlier this year.

Under the restructuring, Kroger gave shareholders cash and securities for their shares, cut 300 corporate jobs and put about $330 million worth of assets up for sale.

Kroger held onto its core operations—about 1,235 grocery stores and 958 convenience stores. Even though earnings are expected to remain depressed through the early 1990s, Kroger executives predict the company will generate sufficient cash to run its stores, replenish its asset base (through new-store construction and renovations) as well as cover its interest expenses.

The decline in media spending to $64 million was part of an overall decline in advertising costs of 6.6% to $211 million, a figure Kroger says includes spending for ads for individual "Kroger Marketing Areas" and for corporate-wide and merchandising programs, much of the latter of which is not included in AA's estimates for unmeasured spending by Kroger.

Operationally, Kroger concentrated on bringing its newest combination food and drugstores up to stride in 1988.

At year's end, 595 or nearly half of Kroger's stores were "combos," up from 401 five years ago. The company has devoted the majority of its new-store budget to combos in recent years, keying on consumers' desires for one-stop shopping and its own desire for a format with higher sales per square foot.

As it proceeds toward the end of its third quarter, Kroger is wrapping up the last elements of its restructuring—selling 11 of its 43 food manufacturing plants and various real estate.

particularly the True brand, in 1987 reduced Loews spending by 21.3% that year from a high of $146.5 million in 1986.

Like other cigarette manufacturers, Loews' Lorillard division continues to face legislative and regulatory challenges from Congress, as well as continued pressures from anti-tobacco groups.

Lorillard, the nation's fourth-largest cigarette manufacturer, saw its market share edge up from 8.2% to 8.3% in 1988, placing it behind Philip Morris' 39.3%, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco's 31.8% and Brown & Williamson's 11.0%, but ahead of American Brands' 6.9% and Liggett Groups' 2.7%. In addition, while total industry sales dropped 2.4%, Lorillard's sales decreased by only 1.9%.

Loews backed its cigarette division with more than $61 million in measured media, 88% of the company's total outlay. Newport claimed $44 million in measured spending, up 33%, as it became the fifth largest-selling brand in the country in 1988, with a market share of 4.6%, up from 4.2% the previous year. The four brands ahead of Newport are Philip Morris' Marlboro (24.7%), RJR's Winston (10.8%), RJR's Salem (7.4%) and B&W's Kool (5.8%). It passed PM's Benson & Hedges.

Advertising for Lorillard's Kent and True brands combined accounted for about 24%, or $17 million of the division's total cigarette ad expenditures. The 1988 market shares for Kent and True brands were 2.3% and 1.0%, respectively. These are roughly the same as the previous year.

In spring 1988, Newport Stripes Menthol 100 Box and Newport Stripes Non-Menthol 100's Box were introduced into approximately 50% of the U.S. This extended the brand's franchise to 12 different packings. The new Newport Stripes products are full flavor, low-tar cigarettes. Brand spending for Newport was $44.4 million, up 33%, reports LNA/Arbitron.

In April 1988, Lorillard announced the sale of its chewing tobacco and little cigar brands to the National Tobacco Co. for approximately $67.7 million. Included in the sale were Lorillard's Louisville manufacturing facility and its storage facilities in Wisconsin.

Loew's CNA Insurance Cos., which has grown from the 18th to the 13th largest insurance organization in the U.S. based on premium volume, spent $5.8 million in advertising in 1988, the same as in 1987.

Bulova, which is approaching its 10th anniversary as a part of Loews, this April adopted a new corporate name—Bulova Corp.—to reflect the company's entry into new and different product markets.

It introduced the 20th Century Limited, watches inspired by designs of the '20s and '30s; expanded the Marine Star divers' series and the Diamond Watch Collection and entered into a licensing agreement to market a line of Harley-Davidson watches. In 1987, Loew's Lorillard division introduced Harley-Davidson brand cigarettes. BULY by Bulova, a line of fashion accessories including a tote, sportbag and backpack with an integrated weather-resistant clock, also was introduced. Bulova spent only $1.3 million in measured media, down 38%.

Despite the high debt load left by its 1986 leveraged buyout and subsequent acquisitions, R.H. Macy has moved ahead with promotion programs.

During 1988 it entered several new market areas and is working to create strong name recognition. It also has been gradually shifting to more private label manufacturer-supplied brand-name ad allowances.

The privately-held company has had to act aggressively to justify its mid-1988 acquisition of former Federated Department Store holdings, Los Angeles-based Bullocks and San Francisco-based I. Magnin. These two units were Chairman Edward Finkelstein's consolation prize when he failed to beat out Robert Campeau for control of Federated Department Stores.

Macy's has acted quickly to bring I. Magnin back to its days of glory by bringing in a large number of "bridge" lines, between moderate-price and designer merchandise, and giving each of them its own boutique and enhancing the level of customer service.

Ad support, to inform customers about the changes taking place at I. Magnin, has been particularly critical in the San Francisco market where Nordstrom, a major threat for any retailer seeking to appeal to the upper-moderate shoppers, has opened two stores.

I. Magnin advertised very little, spending only $4.9 million in 1988, down 24.6%, according to LNA/Arbitron. Bullocks, on the other hand, spent $27.8 million in media, up 4%. The two have been combined into a single operating entity.

Macy's Northeast, the company's largest division, is responsible for the company's most recent new market entry—its first Washington area store (a second will open shortly). Macy's had Washingtonians so well-primed before its debut that it couldn't handle the mobs that clamored to pay a $5 charge (to charity) to preview the store and shop before its official opening.

In its first year, the store is estimated to have generated sales of between $60 million and $80 million. By contrast, Nordstrom, located across the street, generated first-year sales slightly in excess of $100 million.

Expansion continues throughout Florida where Macy's relies on catching the transplanted Northeasterners. The chain also is trying to establish itself in New Orleans and in Texas.

During 1988, Macy's created separate specialty apparel stores to showcase several brands: Charter Club, Fantasies by Morgan Taylor and Aeropostale, and all are being gradually expanded. It also began accepting MasterCard and Visa for the first time and backing that up with a $400,000 campaign, created and handled in-house.

Macy's continues to make heavy use of newspaper ads and other print, and appears to have cut back on its use of direct-mail catalogs. Spot TV also is used for specific sales and to promote seasonal merchandise offerings. Macy's receives tremendous exposure from its annual Thanksgiving Day Parade and Fourth of July New York City Fireworks display.

Macy's Department Store is one of the nation's largest retail advertisers, spending $167.6 million in measured media in 1988, up 4%, according to LNA/Arbitron. The department store spent 91% of its measured total on national newspapers and the rest on spot TV.

Each of Marriott Corp.'s three highly-decentralized divisions—lodging, contract services and restaurants—made or continued to make significant marketing changes in 1988.

Marriott in 1988 introduced 14 Allie's Restaurants at Big Boys locations in San Diego. Named for Alice Marriott, widow of the founder and mother of the current chairman, Allie's are filled with plants and sunlight, and staffed with Reebok-clad waiters and waitresses serving grilled chicken and fajitas.

The concept grew out of a customer survey at Bob's Big Boy restaurants. Not surprisingly, given Big Boy's recent disappointing performance, the findings revealed little preference for Big Boys.

Allie's churned 40% more sales in 1988 than the Big Boys they replaced. The company expects to have 600 Allie's open within five years.

Recently, the Marriott acquired 21 Jolly Roger Restaurants, 15 in San Diego, six in Orlando. In 1988, the company acquired 123 Wag's and Bickford's restaurants, concentrated in Florida, New England and Illinois. These acquisitions, along with most Bob's Big Boys, will be converted to Allie's. The next push is slated for Florida where 82 Wag's and former company-owned Howard Johnson's restaurants are scheduled to be converted.

In the interim, Marriott is not abandoning the 200-plus Bob's Big Boys it still owns. They are being remodeled and expanded as needed. They were backed with $5.8 million in advertising—up 45% from year-earlier levels, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Similar changes have been brewing in the hotel industry, where companies from Raddison to Holiday Inns have rushed to offer hotels for every market segment. Now, in addition to Marriott Hotels and Resorts, travelers may select from: Marriott Suites (nine by the end of this year; 40 by 1993), rates ranging from $89 to $139; Courtyard by Marriott (about 140 properties by the end of the year), priced at $50-$88 a night; Residence Inn by Marriott (currently 142 extended-stay suite hotels, 300 by early 1990s) with rates of $65-$90; and moderately-priced Fairfield Inn (about 45 at the end of the year) with room rates from $30 to $40.

Marriott Hotels and Resorts remain the core of the company's hotel business. There will be close to 200 of them in 14 states and the District of Columbia and 14 countries at the end of this year plus an additional 14 to 16 at the end of next. Advertising support for the group rose almost 81% to $13.5 million.

Sizable media increases also were recorded by Residence Inn by Marriott, more than doubling to $556,000, and Courtyard by Marriott, an almost ninefold increase to $3.1 million.

Marriott opened its first two senior living facilities this year with a total of 700 units. Some 3,000 units are planned by the end of this year.

Mars Inc.'s 14% decline in U.S. ad spending in 1988 was more an indication of new advertising and promotion strategies than a slowdown in Mars' aggressive marketing strategy.

M&M/Mars, the big candy division, in 1988 shifted dollars into promotions such as the multi-year marketing agreement with Walt Disney Co. that includes an upcoming $24 million tie-in with the November video release of Disney's "Bambi."

As a result of the sales promotions, M&M/Mars' media ad spending dropped 4.4% in 1988 to $111 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

M&M/Mars, with Al Poe as senior VP-marketing since last October, has become more daring out of necessity. In 1988 it saw its 37% market share for candy bars passed by Hershey's 44% after Hershey bought Cadbury USA. M&M/Mars has since been more aggressive in introducing line extensions, launching European brands in the U.S. and expanding seasonal candy offerings. Formerly, M&M/Mars concentrated its advertising and promotion on blockbuster brands like Snickers and M&Ms. Ad support for both dropped in 1988: 10% to $22.9 million for Snickers and 18% to $19.7 million for M&Ms

Now, no brand is too small for some support or for line extension. Under Mr. Poe's leadership, Mars has successfully launched Bounty, a chocolate-covered coconut bar popular in Europe, to take on Hershey's Mounds and Almond Joy.

Holidays, M&M-styled candies which shot into the chocolate bars' top 20 in sales in 1988 (according to American Consulting Corp., Orlando, Fla.), received $2 million in spending in 1988. The candy is color-coordinated to various holidays. New intros will be a mint flavor to the red/green of Christmas and a red/white theme for Valentine's Day 1990.

New flavors of Kudos and Skittles were introduced nationally in 1989. The company also is testing peanut butter M&Ms. M&M/Mars in August revived Today's Munch, a peanut brittle bar sold primarily in vending machines. Munch is being promoted in radio and print, as opposed to M&M/Mars' traditional TV focus.

Dove Bar International, with ad spending remaining stable in 1988 at $9.6 million, is focusing on turning M&M/Mars candy into ice cream treats. 3 Musketeers Ice Cream bars went national in 1989, and a Snickers Ice Cream Bar soon will be introduced. The Dove Bar brand received $4.7 million, the same as 1987, while advertising for Rondos Ice Cream treats doubled to $4 million. Forever Yours Sundaes seems on the way out, with ad spending plummeting 98% to $50,000.

The Kal Kan pet food division shifted strategy in the past year to emphasize new gourmet products and rename existing brands with more pizzazz. Sheba, described as a gourmet canned cat food, racked up $28 million sales in 1988, its first year after being brought from Europe, according to John Maxwell, analyst for Wheat First Securities, Richmond, Va. Crave dry cat food and Kal Kan canned cat food were renamed Whiskas, Mars' cat food line in Europe.

As part of a pet food industry-wide move to premium and more upscale products, Kal Kan dog food brands adopted the Kal Kan Pedigree name. Pedigree Select Dinners, a gourmet dog food, was introduced in late 1988. Kal Kan brand spending dropped 19% to a measured $38.4 million in 1988. Sheba took $8.9 million, while Kal Kan canned cat food advertising dropped 39% to $10.7 million.

Uncle Ben's continues to expand its flavored rice dishes with Uncle Ben's Country Inn Rice Mixes and Country Inn Garden Pasta Salads. Uncle Ben's Side Dishes remain in test. Uncle Ben's last year dropped ad spending 15% to $26 million, but put $10.4 million behind a new product, Uncle Ben's Rice in an Instant. It grabbed a 14% share of the instant market, gouging General Foods' Minute Rice, which was left with a 53.3% share, down from 66%.

Advertising at May Department Store Co. declined slightly in 1988 as the company boosted its operations by buying Filene's and Foley's department stores, the latter now challenging May's Lord & Taylor unit for the chain's leadership in volume sales.

The two acquisitions, purchased for $1.5 billion from Federated Department Stores, added $1.2 billion in sales—representing three quarters worth of sales for the two department stores—to give May a 19% gain for the year. Without this single-year boost, May sales would have increased only 7%.

Sales at Houston-based Foley's, with 34 stores, could surpass Lord & Taylor, New York, as May's dollar volume leader this year. L&T sales were $963 million in 1988, compared with $804 million for three quarters for Foley's. Foley's full-year media advertising in its transitional year increased 27.7% to $29.5 million, while L&T's media spending of $26.8 million, dropped 20.9%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

May, which operated 297 department stores in 29 states and Washington D.C. by year-end, opened seven more department stores and seven discount stores in 1988.

In keeping with its longterm plan of nationally expanding its L&T chain, it opened L&Ts in San Antonio, New Orleans and Memphis. In January 1989, May initiated plans to convert four of its Hahne & Co. department stores in New Jersey into L&Ts and sell the remaining five Hahne stores. May has been closing and combining a number of stores on a market-by-market basis since it began to consolidate the stores picked up in its 1986 acquisition of Associated Dry Goods. Hahne & Co., Caldor, Goldwaters, L&T, L.S. Ayres and Robinsons were gained in the purchase.

Lord & Taylor, with sales up only 4.5% in 1988, may be May's most upscale, but it has been criticized by industry observers over the past year who claim it has weakened its image by selling too many private labels.

The May department store unit based in Los Angeles drew $71 million in media spending, the largest among any unit for 1988. Spending was up 14% from 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

May's two discount store divisions, Caldor and Venture, reported a 7% increase in sales to $2.86 billion in 1988. Caldor got $18 million and Venture only $3.1 million in measured spending in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Volume Shoe continued its aggressive growth by opening 116 new Payless ShoeSource stores in 29 states. In 1988, Volume Shoe reported sales of $1.1 billion, up 7%. Payless received $14.8 million in ad support, down 12%.

Mazda Motor of America during 1988 revamped its U.S. marketing arm, revitalized a stagnant ad strategy and built back declining vehicle sales.

The Irvine, Calif.-based subsidiary of Mazda Motor Corp., Hiroshima, turned a sales corner in the U.S. in 1988 by recording a 3.5% growth in car/truck unit sales of 343,620, compared to a volume decline in 1987.

Mazda adopted a new ad strategy beginning in late 1988 by showcasing individual models within its 1989 line, a departure from its traditional advertising of the entire line. Rationale for the plan was to impart personality traits on various models. That strategy set the stage for Mazda's big July debut of its MX-5 Miata convertible.

The 1988 merger of Mazda's two former U.S. operations into Mazda Motor of America was followed by a reorganization of its total marketing effort. The company set up a single national advertising department. It retained Foote, Cone & Belding, Santa Ana, Calif. but told the agency Mazda needed a stronger brand image as well as greater consumer awareness.

The U.S. market share for Mazda's total car sales for 1988 (imported and domestic production) grew to 2.42% from 2.03%, still behind American Honda with 7.26%, Toyota at 6.50%, Nissan at 4.46% and Hyundai at 2.50%. In the U.S. light-truck market, Mazda drew a 1.9% share based on its 93,287 unit sales, a drop of 33,400 units from 1987 when its share was 2.6%. Among the imports, Toyota leads with a 5.1% share, down from 6.5% in 1987.

While total ad spending in 1988 declined about 4.7% from the prior year, the prospect of intensified advertising behind individual new models in the 1990 model year was expected to push ad expenditures to new highs.

Mazda plans to increase its 1989 calendar-year, new-car and truck sales in the U.S. to more than 400,000 units, in spite of a forecast for a softer new car market and an average 2.7% price hike on its carryover models. The company expects truck sales to remain steady at the 100,000-unit level and car sales to improve 14%.

For 1990, Mazda is counting on the Miata and the MPV multipurpose vehicle to help it sell 500,000 vehicles. The forecast calls for sales of 40,000 Miatas, 60,000 MPVs (vans), 300,000 passenger cars and 100,000 pickups.

Mazda is working on a V-8 engine which could eventually power a luxury car to compete headon with the Honda Acura line. It is only nibbling at the moment on the Acura market with its Mazda 929 model, introduced in 1988. Priced just under $20,000, the 929 received the largest ad outlay among Mazda brands for the year.

LNA/Arbitron reported its ad spending at $20 million. Other measured spending for 1988 showed the RX-7 sports car at $16.8 million, the MX-6 sports car at $12.6 million, B2200 and B2600 trucks at $10 million, the Mazda 323, 626 models each at $8.5 million and MPV, $6.7 million.

Due to higher import duties on trucks, Mazda is considering producing pickup trucks in North America. Already the new MX-6 luxury sports coupe and the Ford Probe have been produced at its Flat Rock, Mich., plant with production of the 626 four-door sedan set for this fall.

Ads for the red, white and blue Miata, a two-seat convertible sports car with a $13,800 base price, used Norman Rockwell-like images and called for a return to simpler lifestyles. Miata is expected to attain sales of 20,000 by the end of calendar 1989.

"E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial," which gave MCA's Universal Pictures an extraordinary 30% of the film market seven years ago, broke home video records as well in 1988, selling at least 10 million copies during its holiday season release. "E.T." and "Twins," the December theatrical film releases, were financial boons to MCA—helping fourth quarter results account for 31.8% of annual revenues and 43.2% of operating income.

"E.T." also contributed to a 31.7% growth in ad spending. A cross-promotional campaign, in which the lovable alien starred in spots for Pepsi-Cola, carried a reported $25 million price tag.

Universal Pictures released 19 films in 1988, four more than in 1987. There were no major hits until December, however, when "Twins" racked up $32 million in rentals to distributors, making it the 12th-biggest film of the year, according to Variety. (Top-ranked "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" had rentals of $78 million.) The year-end success brought Universal into a tie with MGM/UA for fifth place among motion picture studios, with a 10% market share, up from sixth place in 1987, with 8%.

Measured ad spending for films rose from only $10.5 million to $65.2 million, with substantial amounts going to network and spot TV and newspapers.

Films most heavily advertised were "Midnight Run" at $8 million and "Gorilias in the Mist" at $7 million. Approximately $6 million each went to "Biloxi Blues," "The Great Outdoors" and "Twins."

In addition to "E.T.," strong home video performers were "Dragnet," "Batteries Not Included," "Biloxi Blues" and "Shakedown." Measured ad spending totaled $7 million, almost three times what was spent in 1987.

The one weak spot among MCA's filmed entertainment operations was TV, where a shaky domestic syndication market contributed to a 17% drop in revenues for the division. In February, MCA consolidated its first-run (Los Angeles) and off-network (New York) TV operations under the L.A. office. Rather than a cutback, however, this was seen as a move that reflects the increasing connections between first-run and syndication projects. It follows similar consolidations by Paramount and Columbia Pictures Television.

In pay TV, MCA gained significant revenues from "Dragnet," "Harry and the Hendersons" and "The Secret of My Success."

Advertising for MCA's tourist attractions should boom when Universal Studios Florida opens and goes head-to-head with Disney next year.

The magic of "E.T." extended to MCA's music division, which handles domestic distribution of home videocassettes. The division also benefited from strong sales of records by Tiffany, Elton John, Bobby Brown, Reba McEntire and George Strait. Operating income was up 46.3% to $60.5 million.

MCA expanded its concert business last year, with the creation of MCA Event Marketing to set up promotions in places like shopping malls and theme parks. In April the company acquired Winterland Concessions, which has merchandising licenses with a number of stars, including Bruce Springsteen and Madonna and provides imprinted sportswear for the Hard Rock Cafe, Levi's and others.

MCA's retail and mail order business continued to suffer as a result of weak sales of gold jewelry at its Spencer Gift Stores and positioning problems in the mail order division. The company has been upgrading the Spencer stores and reorganizing its catalog business.

Measured advertising for MCA's toy products dropped 54.2% to $4.2 million, a fallout from last year's $35 million loss on defective Gotcha! guns, a product of LJN Toys.

MCA spent $3.3 million in measured advertising for WWOR-TV. This was the first year in which the company received a full 12 months of revenues from the Secaucus, N.J., TV station, which it acquired from GenCorp's RKO General subsidiary in April 1987. MCA's broadcasting and cable division also included earnings from the company's 50% interest in USA Network.

The secret to McDonald's Corp.'s continued success ceased being a secret long ago. Its attention to the basics of restaurant management—its motto of QSC&V (quality, service, cleanliness and value)—has given it an unparalleled sales base that translates into an also-unmatched marketing war chest.

Big Mac spent $1.02 billion in global advertising in 1988, including $406.2 million in U.S. media and another $314 million on U.S. promotional marketing. Advertising represented 6.4% of U.S. sales, up from 6.3% in 1987. Yet, this is less than what its competitors in the $60 billion U.S. fast food market spend proportionately.

McDonald's seems to continually find ways to spend its marketing funds more efficiently and with more impact than do its competitors.

It is more experimental with its menu and effective at pulling in customers through in-store games, promotions and sweepstakes, supported with heavy advertising. It maintains high visibility with an extensive building program—602 new restaurants were added in 1988 in traditional and non-traditional sites. It buys media during major events as well as through all dayparts and uses a variety of other media in addition to TV.

Industry sales in 1988 rose less than 5%, while McDonald's total U.S. sales were up 7.6%. Advertising increased faster: a 10.7% increase for measured-media spending and a 13.8% increase on unmeasured marketing.

With total industry growth fairly flat—making the fast-food business a fight for market share rather than sales growth—McDonald's promotional activities have become even more ubiquitous, with a new in-store game or promotion beginning almost immediately after one has ended.

In July 1989 it began a "Blast Back with Mac" promotion, reviving the "McMan in the Moon" character first used nationally in 1987 and featuring instant-win food discount stickers on cold-beverage cups.

That came less than three months after its "Scrabble" game promotion in March and April. In 1988, McDonald's ran "Monopoly II" (an expanded version of a 1987 promotion) during April and "When the U.S. wins, you win" during the Summer Olympics in September and October.

In between those "blockbuster" promotions came a series of smaller in-store promotions, including events tied to popular films: "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" and "Oliver & Co." in 1988; and in 1989, "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids" and "Chip'N Dale's Rescue Rangers."

Other promotions are tied to food products: a giveaway of sample bottles of Kraft salad dressings in June 1988, Chicken McNuggets Fiesta (accompanied by collectible South and Central American coins) in August 1988, and in February 1989 the "McDonald's Menu Song" sweepstakes (spotlighting all items on its menu).

McDonald's $245.4 million network TV and $128.1 million spot TV budgets give it leverage. It was a major advertiser on both the Winter and Summer Olympics broadcasts. It used spots during the Super Bowl broadcast in January 1988, to announce the national, limited-time rollout of its Cheddar Melt sandwich. During the Academy Awards telecast in April 1988 it introduced its new "Good time. Great taste" musical jingle.

It also was represented during such highly rated miniseries as "Lonesome Dove" while it shied away from more controversial broadcasts.

The area of its greatest media-spending growth in 1988 was in syndicated TV, where spending jumped to $12.5 million, up 65% from 1987.

In January 1989 it signed a deal with Media Home Entertainment's Hi-Tops Video unit to develop videos based on the chain's McDonaldland characters (featured in TV commercials targeted to children). The first video, "McTreasure Island," will be available in April 1990.

Eying the heavy traffic in Sears, Roebuck & Co. stores, McDonald's has begun opening restaurants in the department stores. And it has licensed its name and its characters to Sears for development of the McKids apparel and retail-store concepts.

McDonald's has increased its new-product development process yet remains conservative about systemwide introductions. Cheddar Melt rolled out in January 1988, but performed below expectations and was pulled after a planned national test run. In May 1989, Country Style McChicken sandwich, a reformulation of the McChicken sandwich widely available several years ago, went national.

A number of other products have been tested, including a steak biscuit and cinnamon rolls at breakfast, celery and carrot sticks, even fried chicken.

Most analysts expect pizza to be the next big new item. In 1988, McDonald's tried "McPizza," a single-serving pizza, in several markets. That apparently has been scrapped in favor of "McDonald's Pizza," a traditional 14-inch pizza (sold whole rather than in slices) tested in 1989 in selected markets in Indiana and Kentucky.

Mobil Corp. turned full attention to its petroleum and chemical businesses in 1988, following the $1.6 billion sale in June of Chicago-based retailer Montgomery Ward & Co. to an investment group headed by Ward management. As a result, Mobil had its best year since 1981, with earnings up 55%.

Mobil spent the year buying and selling various U.S. refineries and production facilities. The design was to replace less profitable assets with potentially profitable ones. There were plans to trade 240 Mobil stations west of the Rockies to BP/Sohio for 330 of their stations east of the Rockies, a lucrative region for Mobil.

chunk of its measured budget, approximately 40%, into its motor oils and gasoline, both of which are handled by its Marketing & Refining Division in Stamford, Conn. Spending was divided between the two products, with $8.8 million in measured media going for Mobil 1 Motor Oil and $8.3 million for Mobil gasoline. TV was the focus of both marketing efforts.

Sales were up in both categories, with the new 93-octane Super Unleaded Plus gasoline, introduced in some Midwest markets in 1987, helping to account for a 10% increase in gas demand, according to Mobil. In 1988 Mobil launched Mobil Special, an unleaded midgrade (89 octane) gasoline, in major markets east of the Rockies. The product replaces leaded gasoline.

Mobil currently holds a 6.84% share of the auto gasoline market, putting it in fourth place behind Shell at 8.23%; Amoco Corp., 7.27% and Exxon, 7.04%, according to figures from the 1988 Lundberg Survey.

Advertising of $6.3 million was divided between network and spot TV for Mobil 1, whose sales jumped 20% worldwide in 1988. Mobil holds 6.4% of the synthetic lubricants market behind Exxon at 21.7%; Sun, 10.8% and Chevron, 10.5%.

Mobil Chemical Co. spent $14.4 million on the Hefty bag brand in 1988. In an ongoing battle with First Brand's Glad bags for market leadership, Mobil allocated $8.1 million of the total to Hefty Plastic Tall Kitchen and Trash Bags, three times more than in 1987 with most of it for network and syndicated TV.

Mobil eased up on Hefty plastic bags, spending $4.1 million in 1988, down 60%. During both years the bulk of this budget went into network TV. Mobil Chemical also markets Baggies and Kordite.

The third-largest portion of Mobil's ad budget, $3.2 million in 1988, promoted the Mobil name through various corporate sponsorships. In 1988 Mobil signed a seven-year contract to sponsor the New Year's Day Cotton Bowl at a cost of $2 million per year. The first Mobil Cotton Bowl took place in January 1989.

Mobil continues sponsorship of the Williams Racing team in the Grand Prix Drivers championship, the Mobil Track & Field Championship and PBS' Masterpiece Theater and Mystery Theater series. It also continues as a corporate voice on national issues that affect the industry through advocacy ads.

In behavior uncommon for companies operating in a leveraged buyout environment, Montgomery Ward & Co. increased spending on new stores and new advertising campaigns, rather than make sharp cutbacks. Under Chairman Bernard F. Brennan, Ward's moved fast to introduce everyday low prices on thousands of name brand items in its four major merchandise categories.

Despite a continued soft retail market and a horde of low price, name brand imitators—including Sears, Roebuck & Co., led by Mr. Brennan's brother Edward A. —Ward's posted impressive sales and earnings gains, enabling the company to pare down acquisition debt and chart an aggressive course of growth for the coming months.

To signal its new direction, Ward's for the first time in late 1988 took to the TV and radio airwaves with ads featuring Mr. Brennan touting his commitment to low prices on leading brands. The company plans to continue broadcast advertising to reach new customers.

Growth in Montgomery Ward spending in 1988 in fact is credited solely to spending in spot radio of $10.2 million, compared to no spending in that medium in 1987, according to Radio Expenditures Reports. Its other big medium is national newspapers, which drew 81% of total measured media expenditures. Much of Ward's print advertising is unmeasured, appearing as inserts and direct mail pieces.

The turnaround at Ward's is becoming legendary. When Mr. Brennan took the helm in 1985, parent Mobil Corp. was weighing a decision to close the 117-year-old retailer. Losses that year totaled $298 million.

Mr. Brennan slashed merchandise lines, killed Ward's catalog division, reduced employee headcount by 17,000, or nearly 25%, and embarked on a strategy to run Ward's like a specialty store. He chose to compete in four major categories—appliances and electronics, home furnishings, automotive and apparel—and set out to make Ward's competitive in those areas.

Last year he booked record profits of $139 million, up 6.9%, on sales of $8.5 billion, flat with the previous year.

In June 1988, he completed the $3.8 billion buyout from Mobil. Due to the unique structure of the deal—in which he simultaneously sold Ward's credit card operation to General Electric Capital Corp. for $2.7 billion—Mr. Brennan actually bought Ward's for about $1 billion.

Yet even that figure overstates the purchase price, because $400 million represented ongoing real estate debt. So the net cost to Mr. Brennan was only $600 million, a figure he has paid down already by $75 million.

Ward's ended the year leveraged less than 10-to-1, very comfortable by LBO standards, where typical debt-to-equity ratios run as high as 25-to-1.

With his strategy in place and his finances in order, Mr. Brennan is set to expand. In 1990, he plans to open 35 new stores and hire 10,000 employees. Ward's currently operates 330 stores in 39 states and employs about 70,000.

Even as it expands its broadcast purchases—Ward's this fall will air TV commercials in 23 major markets, which is double the number of last autumn's initial broadcast campaign—Ward's does not plan to significantly reduce its print purchases. In part, it sustains its level of print spending by achieving greater operating efficiencies, such as using desktop computers in house to design inserts.

The centerpiece of its broadcast campaign, handled by Saffer USA Advertising, will continue to be the use of spokesman Jamie Widdow, an actor who starred in "Animal House." Ward's will go for a more contemporary look to its ads, with quicker takes and more upbeat music.

Mr. Brennan will appear in the ads only rarely, if and when Ward's has a strategic positioning statement to make to the public. Ward's last remaining strategic push will be in the apparel area, where it still needs to focus more sharply on its customers' preferences and establish name brand credibility.

Its first two specialty formats—Electric Avenue for appliances and electronics, and Auto Express for automotive goods and services—strategically are set. Home Ideas for home furnishings is undergoing a strategic rethinking process.

Nestle S.A. continued to build U.S. market share in its big coffee and pet foods operations and maintained its strong share in frozen dinner entrees. And it invested heavily in European candy and pasta markets in preparation for the relaxation of tariff duties by the European Community in 1992.

Nestle worked on agency compensation and media issues as well. In Europe, it explored taking more control over media buying with an eye toward exercising similar controls with its U.S. budget. In the U.S., Nestle Foods Corp. last year consolidated spot media buying with J. Walter Thompson USA.

Early this year, Carnation unveiled agency incentives that link agency fees with how advertising tests in research. Carnation said the plan, created in-house with assistance from Lintas:New York, was developed independent of its Swiss parent.

In instant coffees, Nestle strengthened its No. 2 position behind General Foods to a 33.1% share from 32.1%, according to John C. Maxwell Jr. of Wheat, First Securities. Gains in Taster's Choice, Nestle's leading instant coffee, and Hills Bros., MJB and Chase & Sanborn, three regional brands, offset the slippage in Nescafe.

Nestle, attempting to energize Nescafe, boosted total measured media spending on the brand by 52.3% to $9.2 million. Spending on Taster's Choice declined 12.7% to $19.6 million. The far-smaller budgets for the regional Hills and MJB brands showed increased spending.

In regular coffee, the regional labels also improved, strengthening Nestle's share by 1.5 points to 13.0%, but still a distant No. 3 to Procter & Gamble's 31.8% and General Foods USA at 27%.

Nestle Foods last year considered but rejected consolidating its Hills Bros. coffee business, San Francisco, with its Nestle coffee unit in Purchase, N.Y.

Last September, Nestle invaded a fast-rising market with the national rollout of its Toll House Ready-to-Bake Cookie Dough, drawing on the power of its Toll House chocolate brand. It backed the launch with $6.1 million in media spending.

Nestle strengthened its candy business in 1988 with the takeover of Rowntree PLC, a U.K. confectioner. The buyout included Sunmark, a U.S. marketer of candies and nuts. Nestle also bought Buitoni, the Italian pasta giant. The company paid a combined $6 billion for the two purchases.

Nestle's Wine World sales grew by 10% in 1988, surpassing the $100 million mark in sales. Early this year, Chiat/Day/Mojo, San Francisco, resigned as agency for Wine World, which shifted to Fran Hulse Advertising, San Francisco.

Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp., a distant No. 2 behind Gerber Products Co. in baby food, increased total measured spending last year 55.6% to $7.4 million. A new campaign featured Joan Lunden of "Good Morning America."

Beech-Nut, in the Nestle family since 1979, was sold late this month to Ralston Purina. Nestle, reportedly unforgiving of Beech-Nut's earlier ethical breech, had quietly put the business up for sale. Beech-Nut pled guilty in 1987 to producing and marketing apple juice that was adulterated and mislabeled.

Carnation also generated controversy in the baby food market with its introduction last November of an infant formula brand that Nestle already sold in Europe.

Carnation promoted its Good Start H.A. formula as "hypoallergenic," suggesting the brand had a reduced potential for causing allergic reaction. The FDA, American Academy of Pediatrics and nine states contended parents might infer that Good Start was non-allergenic.

Bowing to pressure, Carnation ended a consumer information campaign from Ogilvy & Mather, Los Angeles, and dropped hypoallergenic—but not 'H.A.' —from the product label.

In July, Carnation paid $90,000 to nine states to settle their investigations. But Carnation said it remained committed to infant formulas.

the latest formula bout faced by Nestle, put on the defensive in the 1970s for its sale of formula in developing nations. Last October, an advocacy group, Action for Corporate Accountability, reinstated its boycott of Nestle, charging the company with violating World Health Organization rules for infant-formula marketing.

Carnation's share in the $5.9 billion pet food market rose slightly to 12.0% from 11.8%, just a notch behind No. 2 Quaker at 12.8%. Ralston Purina dominates with 28.3%.

Carnation introduced Perform, a premium brand for dogs and cats, in 1988. Its pitch was home delivery. Perform competes with Hill's Science Diet, Iams Co. and Ralston Purina in the growing market for pet foods sold in non-supermarket outlets. Measured spending on Perform last year totaled only $352,200.

Carnation continued to provide strong media support for premium pet products: Fancy Feast canned cat food got $10.9 million, down 5.2%; Grand Gourmet canned dog food received $9.4 million, up 71%, according to LNA/Arbitron. Fancy Feast rose 0.1 share points to 14.6% of the $999 million canned cat food market and Grand Gourmet climbed 2.6 share points to 5.4% of the $920 million canned dog food market, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities.

Friskies cat food line drew $8.7 million in media spending, a 45% boost that helped push its overall share of the canned and dry cat food market worth $1.79 billion to 16.3% from 15.6% in 1987.

Stouffer's Lean Cuisine continued to lead the $1.7 billion low-calorie frozen food entree market with an estimated 38% share, about the same as 1989. That translates to about a 25% share of the $3 billion frozen entree market.

Stouffer's introduced in the spring of 1989 a seven-item line of hot and spicy foods with names like Ginger Chicken and Jambalaya Creole, all under the Irrezestables label. The launch introduction was handled by Tatham-Laird & Kudner, which recently replaced Della Femina, McNamee WCRS as the Lean Cuisine agency.

Stouffer branded products drew $35 million in measured spending in 1988, down 2.8%. Frozen entrees, including Lean Cuisine, totaled $22.6 million, up 32%.

Cosmair, a cosmetics marketer made up basically of two major divisions, L'Oreal and Lancome, in early 1988 extended its L'Oreal hair-care series with Studio Line spritz, sprays and related products via McCann-Erickson Worldwide, New York. Spending on Studio Line reached $13.5 million.

This fall, Cosmair will spend an estimated $35 million introducing Plenitude, a mass-market skin-care line that will face off against P&G's Oil of Olay, which has a 28% share of $640 million (at retail) mass-market for facial lotion. Plenitude, a global brand already sold in Europe and Australia, has been tested in Dallas and Atlanta.

Cosmair, which is owned 62% by Nestle and the remainder by L'Oreal, spent $17.1 million backing Lancome branded products, up 27%, and $42.2 million in support of the L'Oreal line, up 33.5%.

Acquisition of Triangle Corp. in 1988 and the growing strength of Fox Broadcasting Network have made News Corp. a powerhouse in the U.S. media market.

The Rupert Murdoch company also expanded its empire into the free-standing insert business, acquiring Product Movers and Quad/Marketing in August 1988. The acquisition gave News Corp. half the FSI market.

In the magazine division, Mr. Murdoch has moved briskly with startups, acquisitions and divestitures.

Possibly the most closely followed startup, and riskiest to date, is News Corp.'s launch this spring of Mirabella, a woman's high-fashion monthly, named for ex-Vogue Editor Grace Mirabella, who serves as the new publication's editorial director.

After the $3 billion acquisition of Triangle Publications and its TV Guide in summer 1988, Mr. Murdoch quickly folded Triangle's Good Food. In July, 1989, News Corp. surprised industry observers by folding once-promising In Fashion magazine, which only a few months before it had received a slick redesign.

News Corp. ended two magazine joint ventures. It sold its 50% stake in the American and English versions of Elle to partner, Hachette Publications, in September 1988. In early 1989, News Corp. acquired from Hachette the half interest in Premiere it didn't already own.

News Corp. acquired Soap Opera Digest from Network Publishing Corp. this summer. The acquisition is expected to strengthen News Corp.'s already-strong presence at supermarket and convenience store checkouts where it is sold alongside TV Guide.

In what was termed a debt-reduction move, News Corp. sold its Travel Information Group, comprised of lucrative directories and travel industry trade magazines, to Reed International PLC in spring 1989 for $825 million.

In 1988, News Corp.'s total U.S. advertising grew 4.6%, with much of the growth related to the support of 17 films released by Twentieth Century-Fox compared with support of 12 releases in 1987. AA attributed all Triangle advertising in 1988 to News Corp.

Two box office winners drew heavy support. "Big" pulled $10.5 million, largely in newspapers, network and spot TV. The other blockbuster, "Diehard," received $9.5 million, largely in the same media.

The single largest measured ad expenditure, $36.5 million, was listed for TV Guide, 70% of it spent in spot TV. However, much of that is believed to be tradeouts.

The Fox Network was backed by $4.6 million in measured media, mostly magazines. News Corp. spent far more promoting the fledgling network in 1987 when media spending measured $13.7 million. Fox Network moved this fall into Mondays, its third night of prime time. Its rating for Saturday and Sunday prime time periods in the 1988-89 season rose 39% to a 6.1 average from 4.4. Each rating point equals 904,000 homes.

Fox continues to operate in the red although a profit is expected this coming season.

With a flood of new cars and an ad budget for 1989-model vehicles estimated at 40% larger than for 1988, Nissan Motor Corp. USA is pulling out of its recent sales dive.

Halfway into what has been a mediocre year for the rest of the auto industry, Nissan is regaining some of the market share it surrendered during the dismal 1986-1988 period. By mid-year 1989, Nissan's U.S. sales were up about 10% over its 1988 year-to-date performance.

By fall 1990, Nissan, a subsidiary of Nissan Motor Co., Tokyo, will have replaced almost every vehicle line introduced in 1987 with all-new products. Only its compact pick-up truck, which remains in a sales slump, escapes the revamp.

Perhaps its biggest gamble will take place this fall with the U.S. launch of Infiniti, an upscale luxury car. Advance advertising in the trade and enthusiast publications has carried the "Created by Nissan" tag, but future associations with Nissan will not be so overt. Sales of 45,000 Infinitis are anticipated its first full year through a network of 125 dealers.

During 1988, Nissan accounted for 114,538 of the 120,000-unit shortfall in all Japanese imports in the U.S. below their self-imposed 2.3 million quota.

To clear inventories, Nissan launched a costly rebate program with price advertising that did little to enhance a quality image. Rebates have since been discontinued and Nissan has vowed to keep them from 1989 models.

During 1988, Nissan's total car/truck unit sales (imported and domestic production) were 642,461, down 13.9%. Nissan cars accounted for 4.46% of the U.S. market, down from 5.17%, still behind Honda's 7.26% and Toyota's 6.50%. In the U.S. light-truck market, Nissan accounted for a 3.48% share, down from 4.64% in 1987.

Import sales of Nissan's best-selling Sentra, a sub-compact sedan priced at $6,999, accounted for 134,984 units, up 11.4%. The Sentra received $17 million in measured ad spending in 1988, up 20% from the previous year, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Sales of Maxima slid to 74,451 in 1988, although Nissan expects the $30 million spent on measured advertising for the year (up from $5 million) to build sales momentum for 1989. Its goal is to sell 110,000 Maximas.

The industry-wide slump in truck sales was met by a 66% boost in measured truck advertising to $35 million. Nissan anticipates selling 173,000 trucks in 1989, up 2%. Nissan spends about 30% of its measured ad budget on trucks.

Nissan's 1989 model year reverted to the "Built for the human race" theme of 1987, scuttling 1988's much criticized "yuppie engineers" TV spot.

The Sentra, Stanza, Pulsar, Pathfinder and trucks were carryover models in 1989, but there were four all new or completely redesigned models—the 240SX, Maxima, Axxess and 300ZX. Their intros came at staggered intervals to permit focused advertising of one new model at a time, in what was termed an "event marketing" approach.

The Infiniti initially will offer the Q-45, a $35,000 to $40,000 V-8-powered luxury sedan and the M-30 coupe and convertible, equipped with a 3-liter V-6. The coupe will be priced between $22,000 and $25,000.

Nissan played with its media mix in [illegible] boosting its magazine spending [illegible] $35 million. Then midway through the 1989 model year, it canceled the remainder of its magazine schedule to shift $9 million more into spot TV to lend national support to advertising expended by regional dealers.

During 1988, Nissan consolidated all marketing through 11 regional general managers, replacing a more localized plan in which ads were created by 33 local agencies.

Noxell pared its advertising and promotion budget in 1988 to pre-1987 levels as the pace of new product introductions slowed down. In 1987, major introductions in the Cover Girl, Clarion and Noxzema lines had stimulated ad growth.

Media ad spending for the Cover Girl brand dropped 6% to $43 million; fell 9% to $19 million for Clarion and slipped 5.8% to $9.5 million for Noxzema, according to LNA/Arbitron. Cover Girl remains the largest brand advertised in the U.S. cosmetics category, slightly ahead of Schering-Plough's Maybelline line.

Cosmetics account for over half of Noxell's total sales, with toiletries a substantial part of the remainder. Lestoil household products are minimal contributors.

Noxell's premier product line, Cover Girl, accounts for 50% of total Noxell cosmetics sales. Cover Girl increased its share of mass-market cosmetics in the first half of 1989 to 23%, after a fall in 1988 to 21%. Nevertheless, sales are flat in 1989 and retailers are reducing inventories.

As a result, Noxell accelerated promotional activity in 1989 and has instituted selective price increases to boost gross margins. The second half of this year will see additional price increases, the company says.

While Noxell says its consumer market shares are strong, it has suffered in the past several quarters by a trimming of retail inventories, say Wall Street analysts.

Some industry observers say the company needs more exciting products to create new momentum. Cover Girl's new packaging and colors and the Clarion skincare line should at least help in the near-term. Others think Noxell is seeking a major acquisition in the toiletries and personal care products area as a sure-fire way to boost market share and fuel sales growth.

Cover Girl continued active on the new product front. This summer Cover Girl debuted its first sunscreens, Sun Shines SPF 15 lip gloss and Summer Face Tinted Gel Blush.

In August 1988, Cover Girl introduced Extremely Gentle cosmetics line, including pressed powder, eye shadows, blush and the now No. 1-rated hypoallergenic mascara, following the launch of a treatment line for eyes and skincare with shadows and lash primers, makeup remover and moisturizers.

Cover Girl products account for just under 50% of the mass face makeup cosmetics market. The brand holds 35.5% share of an essentially no-growth mass cosmetics mascara market. It has a one-third-plus share of the mass eyeliner market and 30% share of the mass eye shadow market, up a fraction over 1988. Cover Girl lipstick, which ranked No. 2 in the color cosmetics category with a 29% share, exhibited strong sales growth fueled by the introduction of Soft Radiant Lights lipstick.

Cover Girl's share of the flat-growth nail polish market is 15%, up slightly over last year with a reshaded nail polish line and new NailSlicks Transparencys positioned against Cutex and Sally Hansen.

Clarion products division has yet to see the $70 million in annual sales predicted by industry analysts when the new line debuted in 1986. However, its 1989 share of mass cosmetics market rose to 4.1%, up from 2.9% in 1988, says Brenda Lee Landry, analyst with Morgan Stanley. Sales in 1989 have increased 40% in the first quarter and more than 30% in the second.

Noxell reports the introduction of the Clarion skin treatment line in first-quarter 1989 contributed additional momentum. Clarion's new ad campaign with the theme, "Looking Great and Knowing It," debuted in July 1988. The Leo Burnett USA campaign is credited with pushing up sales 20% to $50 million in 1988. The campaign stresses the line's personalized color service via Clarion computers in retail stores. The trend-setting, in-store color analysis computer now features Spanish-language software.

Noxell says Clarion market shares and dramatic sales increases were gained in all products—particularly liquid makeup, powder and blush. Clarion now has a 6.9% share of the liquid face makeup market in chains and drugstores.

Most products in the Clarion line were reshaded last year, including the lipstick line, which contributed to a doubling of business. Another contributor was the introduction of Lasting Color Lipstick in 1988. Clarion holds 2.5% of the mass lipstick market.

In April 1989, Noxell introduced a new 13-product Clarion Skin Care line. It is expected to boost advertising for the line by 20%.

Noxema brand products, including Noxzema Medicated skin cream, the No. 1 facial cleansing cream, and Noxzema shaving cream, with two new formulas, may get an ad boost following the move from Campbell-Mithun-Esty to Burnett.

Noxema's 15% share of the $280 million face creams and lotions market is expected to decline unless new products are forthcoming to revitalize the line, according to Wall Street analysts. A potential catalyst could be Noxzema's Clear-Ups, consisting of a new gel product, that was introduced early in 1989. Another recent contributor is DifRinse, the first water soluble cold cream product. It debuted in third-quarter 1988.

erations to expand, continued to spend heavily in advertising.

Nynex's measured advertising was up 24%, according to LNA/Arbitron, with the single largest expenditure credited to New York Telephone Co.—$32.6 million in 1988, up 7.2%, and split largely between spot TV and newspapers.

New York Telephone's residence campaign continued the theme, "A Call Can Make a Difference" to increase usage.

The business campaign features products and services that can help solve customers' telecommunications problems through technological advances. Ads are tagged, "Think Ahead."

New England Telephone & Telegraph continued its same "conflict-resolution" ad campaign of 1987. Advertising shot up 39.8% to $13.7 million, mostly in spot TV, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Nynex's umbrella corporate campaign via Young & Rubicam was themed, "The Answer is Nynex." Key ads featured the sky falling, hell freezing over and the world coming to a halt without Nynex. Spending rose to $11.3 million for corporate advertising from $4.7 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Yellow Pages advertising continued the "Human Cartoon" campaign via Chiat/Day/Mojo. Ads feature a charade-type game to encourage viewers to guess the directory heading. Ads are tagged, "If it's out there—it's in here."

This fall Nynex will launch in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., and Burlington, Vt., Calling Number Delivery, which displays the number of the incoming call; Automatic Recall, which retrieves the last incoming call if a customer happens to miss picking up the phone in time; Automatic Callback, which redials the last outgoing call; and Customer-Oriented Trace, which enables a customer to trace the last incoming call.

In April 1989, New York Telephone launched Nynex's "Info-Look," a videotex service which allows a personal computer user to access information data bases and services through one telephone line. It is expected to be available in Boston this fall. Nynex can transmit data, but is restricted from providing the information.

Advertising for Nynex Business Centers, which sold $400 million in equipment and services in 1988, dropped 52% to $1.3 million, according to LNA/Arbitron. Nynex has 81 outlets, second only to Businessland with 120, according to Anne Stahel, analyst, StoreBoard Inc., a Dallas-based market research company. It ranks 10th among computer specialty stores, a category led by Computerland with 482 stores, says Ms. Stahel.

Nynex is building alliances with telecommunications authorities and partners in Britain, France, Japan, China, the Netherlands, Spain, Italy, Singapore, West Germany, Sweden and Taiwan. "Bell operating companies are expanding internationally. They can get into offering services in international markets that they can't get into in the U.S. due to restrictions," said Cathy Clarke, senior analyst, The Yankee Group, Boston.

Chairman Delbert C. Staley retired this month and was succeeded by William C. Ferguson, president-CEO.

operations; the New York Knicks basketball team and MSG Network cable. In July, the company agreed to sell to Ford Motor Co. its remaining non-entertainment entity, Associates First Capital Corp., a financial services company. Ford is paying $3.5 billion for Associates.

Paramount will not end the year as the nation's largest entertainment company as intended, since its $12.2 billion offer to purchase Time Inc. disintegrated at midyear, allowing Time to consumate its $14 billion merger with Warner Communications.

The company's largest advertiser, Paramount Pictures Corp., had a strong 1988, with such hits as "Fatal Attraction." The division spent an estimated $69 million on movie promotions, 83% its measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Of the 30 movies Paramount released in 1988, the company promoted "Crocodile Dundee II" the heaviest, with $6.5 million in advertising. Its second place was "Coming to America," which drew $6.1 million.

For the year, Paramount's share of theatrical rentals dropped from a first-place 20% in 1987 to second-place 16% in 1988, as Walt Disney Co. powered its way to a 20% share from 14%.

Paramount started the summer of 1989 on a strong note with the release of "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," (grossing $168 million), however, it struck out with "Star Trek V: The Final Frontier," which made only $50 million. Paramount as a result slipped into second place behind Warner Bros. whose "Batman" and "Lethal Weapon II" blockbusters gave it 17.8% of the nation's box office take through July, compared with 17.5% for Paramount. Disney holds the No. 3 spot, with 13.8%, due primarily to its surprise hit "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids."

Operating income for Madison Square Garden rose because of increased ad and subscriber revenues at MSG Network and increased income from the N.Y. Knicks. The Knicks had higher attendance, greater TV revenue and income from playoff games. In 1988, MSG Network entered into an agreement to televise some New York Yankees baseball games through the year 2000. Approximately $2 million was spent advertising MSG-related properties.

In 1988, J.C. Penney Co. essentially completed its decade-long repositioning. Gone are the hardware, major appliance, lawn-and-garden, automotive, camera, sporting goods and home-electronics departments. In are clothes, clothes and more clothes.

But now the nation's fourth largest retailer faces its most daunting challenge. Before it can see results from its estimated $2 billion makeover, Penney's must convince consumers it is no longer the dowdy mass merchandiser they once knew.

To address this makeover, Penney's has made "fashion credibility" a priority in its advertising message, which previously focused on sales, said Jim Hradecky, senior VP-creative director for N W Ayer/Dallas, the retailer's agency.

In spring 1989, it introduced on network TV a series of stylish, contemporary and sometimes humorous image spots, which positioned Penney's as America's fashion department store for men's, women's and children's apparel.

Periodic sale events still are important to Penney's strategy, but the value message has been tempered with a stronger fashion/image message, Mr. Hradecky said.

Special events and promotions also are key. Penney's will salute "The Spirit of the American Woman" in a two-week October promotion that is expected to return annually. Also, in November, Pee-Wee Herman will set up a playhouse full of merchandise in most of Penney's 1,400 stores. In October 1988, Penney's and Pizza Hut did a joint merchandise tie-in with the Steven Spielberg/George Lucas animated dinosaur film "The Land Before Time."

In the future, Penney's looks to grow outside its base of 1,400 department stores. It is experimenting with a number of specialty retail concepts, from apparel shops to furniture stores.

Penney's hopes that any or all of them match the success of its Garland, Texas-based Units subsidiary, a 160-unit modular knit clothing chain that now is being expanded into Canada and the U.K.

Among the concepts being tested are: Portfolio Interiors by J.C. Penney, a furniture, accessories and custom decorating chain; Tezio, a 14-unit private label cosmetics chain and In Details, a three-unit upscale bed-and-bath shop.

Penney's is considering spinning off its successful MixIt sportwear department into a separate freestanding chain. It now has one store open. Also, Penney's is considering opening in the fall a moderately-priced misses sportswear concept, called Amanda Fielding.

Penney's sunk $106 million into Telaction, an interactive home shopping service, before calling it quits in March 1988 and taking a $20 million write off. Instead, Penney's has tuned in with a 24-hour cable shopping channel. In April, it acquired the Shop Television Network, its joint venture partner since 1987 and renamed the service the J.C. Penney Television Shopping Channel. Penney's is the parent company of Thrift Drug and The Treasury Drug Center, which operated 434 stores by year-end 1988.

PepsiCo's soft-drink operations posted the biggest sales gains while its fast food operations continued to serve up the largest orders in sales and ad volume during 1988.

Pepsi-Cola, known for creating event advertising—it brought Michael Jackson into the cola wars—had mixed results with presenters in 1988 and 1989.

Public pressure led Pepsi to drop its affiliation with Madonna after it ran a two-minute commercial including snippets from her provocative music video, decried as sacrilegious in some quarters.

Better suited for public consumption was Los Angeles Dodgers' pitching ace Orel Hershiser, who is doing a double-header plug for Pepsi and the company-owned Pizza Hut chain.

The company's restaurant segment, which includes Kentucky Fried Chicken and Taco Bell, accounted for 37% of all sales during 1988 and nearly 58% of PepsiCo's total measured media spending, according to LNA/Arbitron. In April, Tracy-Locke, Dallas, lost the Taco Bell account to Foote, Cone & Belding after a review.

PepsiCo spent $248.8 million, down 2.4%, in media to advertise its three big restaurant chains. KFC pulled $100.6 million of the total, down 10.8%; Pizza Hut drew $83.1 million, up 5.3%; Taco Bell spent $64.9 million, up 3%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

In February, PepsiCo sold its bottled water operation (Ice Mountain label) to Poland Spring Co., part of the Perrier Group.

PepsiCo also completed the biggest U.S. acquisition of a soft-drink bottling operation to date, paying $1.78 billion to General Cinema Corp. for the largest independent Pepsi-Cola bottler in the U.S. This followed its $705 million buyout of Grand Metropolitan's soft-drink bottling operations in 1988.

In its battle with Coca-Cola for market share, Pepsi gained an additional four-tenths of a point to claim a 31.3% share to Coke's 40%, the same as in 1987.

In the diet soft-drink segment, Pepsi's share of the U.S. market increased to 28.4% during 1988, up from 27.1% in 1987.

The new Diet Mountain Dew alone accounted for 1% market share after only one complete year in 1988. However, Pepsi is still chasing Coca-Cola, which boosted its share in the diet soft-drink segment from 42.4% to 44.3% in 1988.

As expected, the juice-added market continues to evaporate for Pepsi's segment-leading Slice and Diet Slice brands. Slice's share continued its free fall, from 3.8% of total market in 1986 to 2.7% in 1987 to 1.8% in 1988.

This spring, Pepsi began an attempt to salvage Slice by reducing its juice content and repositioning the troubled brand in the lemon-lime segment. Segment leaders are Coke's Sprite and Dr Pepper's 7UP. Including their diet counterparts, Sprite and 7UP claimed 4.4% and 4.1%, respectively.

Dallas-based Frito-Lay, which represented 42% of PepsiCo's overall operating profits in 1988, increased an estimated 10% in snack foods sales to $4.1 billion at retail ($2.87 billion manufacturer's level), according to Snack Food magazine.

Frito-Lay improved its share in the U.S. potato chip market with a 73% share of the $1.607 billion (manufacturers value) market. Its Doritos and Fritos separately accounted for 40.4% and 20% of market, respectively. F-L grew 13.5% in dollars in the category from 1987 to 1988, according to Snack Food. Doritos drew $14.6 mil-

A Ruffles line extension in 1988, Ruffles Cheddar n' Sour Cream, drew strong sales its first year, according to PepsiCo. F-L's Ruffles Light, with lower oil, remains in test; Ruffles B-B-Q is being repositioned as Ruffles Mesquite Grille B-B-Q (sweeter & hickory smoked flavored), and Ruffles Ranch went national this May. Ruffles received about $8.3 million in measured media in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron. The line's overall budget is expected to expand to $12 million this year.

F-L continued to dominate the corn/tortilla chip market with a 73% share of the $1.607 billion (manufacturers value) market. Its Doritos and Fritos separately accounted for 40.4% and 20% of market, respectively. F-L grew 13.5% in dollars in the category from 1987 to 1988, according to Snack Food. Doritos drew $14.6 million in measured spending. F-L's largest outlay for any brand, according to LNA/Arbitron. Strong sales came from new flavor, Salsa Rio, which rolled national in 1988, and from Doritos Light varieties, Nacho Cheese and Cool Ranch, which were in 60% of the U.S. by year-end.

Its snack foods got an international boost in mid-1989 when PepsiCo acquired from France's BSN two British companies, Walkers Crisps and Smiths Crisps, for $1.35 billion. Both had been part of RJR Nabisco until bought by BSN in 1989.

Challenging times are ahead for Pfizer. Several patents on its most profitable drugs are expiring, a few of its consumer products have lost share points and the effectiveness of its Plax product has been brought into question.

And with many pharmaceutical companies being forced to merge, Pfizer's time may be nearing. Wertheim Schroeder & Co.'s Jonathan Gelles says Pfizer is not large enough to remain independent and be competitive.

Pfizer in 1988 finished acquiring for $200 million the 80% of Oral Research Laboratories it didn't already own. Oral produces Plax, a prebrushing rinse said to remove dental plaque. With $15 million in measured spending Pfizer pumped into the brand, Plax sales quickly leaped 170% in food stores to gain a 14.5% share of the $720 million mouthwash market, behind Warner-Lambert's Listerine's 26% share and Procter & Gamble's Scope's 23%.

Neil B. Sweig, a drug industry analyst for Prudential-Bache Securities, estimated 1988 brand sales at $105 million, with the brand on the way to the $150 million mark in 1989.

The bright prospects may have been dampened by an August cover story in Consumer Reports claiming Plax contains no chemical plaque fighter. It cites a "well-controlled study" that Pfizer maintained should be discounted because competitor Warner-Lambert financed the independent study. Pfizer already had changed labeling after the Council of Better Business Bureaus' National Advertising Division said the claim that Plax removes 300% more plaque than brushing alone lacked adequate substantiation.

Pfizer ad agency Ally & Gargano is readying a campaign to minimize the damage.

Ben-Gay lost a share point to 39% in 1988, a victim of encroaching competition, notes James Callandrillo, project manager-pharmaceuticals for Kline & Co., Fairfield, N.J.

About $2.5 million of the $5.4 million spent on the Ben-Gay line in 1988 was turned over to the Ben-Gay Warming Ice line extension, also designed to counter Bristol-Myers' Mineral Ice, which now commands a 10% share. Ben-Gay's measured media dipped to $5.3 million, down 4%.

Although Mr. Callandrillo estimated Pfizer Leeming/Pacquin division's Visine still holds 52% of the $120 million eye-care arena, the line has staged heavy retail promotions to deflect competition. Abbott Lab's Murine, Murine Plus and Clear Eyes combined have about a 25% share.

Leeming-Pacquin's Barbasol retained a 20% share of the $300 million shaving cream market and added Barbasol Gel in July 1988, thanks to the expiration of S.C. Johnson & Son's shaving gel patent. Barbasol drew only $1.1 million, same as 1987.

Backed with a $5.8 million budget, Coty's Ex'cla.ma'tion debuted in time for Christmas 1988. It was one of only a handful of new women's mass fragrances. Eckerd Drug's Karen Durham called it the year's best launch. It augments a strong arsenal of Coty fragrances including Stetson, Lady Stetson, Iron, Men's Musk, Emeraude and Sand & Sable.

Heaviest Coty media support was for Stetson, at $7.3 million, up almost 20% over 1987. Another $6.3 million backed Lady Stetson, a 24% drop from 1987, its introductory year. Stetson and Emeraude were withdrawn recently from Warwick Advertising and are currently in-house.

Overnight Success Cream, with $1.5 million in media spending, should get even more this year as others scurry to tap the mass-market skincare boom.

Minipress, an anti-hypertensive that brings in $259 million, lost its patent in June, and Feldene, with sales of $616 million, loses its patent in 1992.

Pfizer sold Equalactin, a combination constipation and diarrhea remedy that debuted in 1987 and had reached a 2% market share. Buyer was Numark Laboratories, Edison N.J.

The Roerig division continues to be at the forefront of advertising ethical products. It has a marketing-sales-ad budget of $75 million used primarily for cable TV healthcare programs.

Pfizer assigned Bozell, New York, the estimated $30 million account for Alitame, a high-intensity sweetener awaiting FDA approval.

Philip Morris Cos., which pushed past Procter & Gamble as the nation's leading advertiser in 1987, built onto its lead in 1988, largely through the $13.1 billion purchase of Kraft Inc., the 22nd largest national advertiser in 1987.

With Kraft came a marketing expertise that could help turn around General Food's ailing Post cereals and Maxwell House divisions.

PM merged its Kraft and General Foods units in February 1989, forming Kraft General Foods, and shifted the power base to Kraft's Glenview, Ill., headquarters over GF's Rye Brook, N.Y., home.

KGF was then carved up into seven operation units with combined sales of $22.5 billion, profits of $1.9 billion and some of the world's leading food brands. According to KGF, the combo spent $940 million in advertising and $760 million in promotion. Aside from these two giants, PM spent $282.1 million in media advertising on cigarettes, up 6.7% and $169.4 million on Miller Brewing's beer advertising, down 5.1%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Heading the overall unit as president-COO is Kraft President-CEO Michael Miles; Kraft Chairman John Richman was named chairman-CEO until 1990, when Mr. Miles assumes the CEO post. A cross-fertilization that put GF managers at the helm of Kraft and Kraft managers in control of GF failed at the top as the newly named divisional presidents left by mid-1989. Former Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. Chairman-CEO Richard Mayer, 49, is now president of GF USA and James Kilts, former Kraft USA senior VP-strategy and development, is the new Kraft USA president.

As a result of the restructuring, in April 1989, PM consolidated its network and cable TV buying assignment for KGF at D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York. Previously, DMB&B had the buying assignment for GF and Foote, Cone & Belding, Chicago, handled Kraft. Grey Advertising retains buying for children's TV.

One of the big tasks at PM the past several years has been to shore up Maxwell House's sagging coffee fortunes. In 1988, Maxwell House, a unit of General Foods, had a 28% share to Procter & Gamble's Folgers 31.8% in the $2.6 billion regular coffee market, said John Maxwell, Wheat First Securities analyst. Maxwell House lost the lead to Folgers in 1987, a year Maxwell House media budget was slashed by $17.5 million.

In 1988, GF began a coffee ad blitz, pumped $45 million into Maxwell House, according to LNA/Arbitron. An Ogilvy & Mather-created ad campaign began running in early 1989 featuring newscaster Linda Ellerbee and weatherman Willard Scott in a Maxwell House/Folgers taste test. It helped bring Maxwell House back into the No. 1 position as of June 1989. Despite the campaign's success, O&M lost the $50 million account to DMB&B in February.

GF also got good mileage from two new value-added brands, Maxwell House Rich French Roast and Maxwell House Colombian Supreme. Both are higher priced than regular Maxwell House.

PM expanded its leading position in the cigarette market by 1.5 share points to 39.3%, compared to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco's 31.8%, according to Mr. Maxwell. Led by the strength of Marlboro, the overall share increase was "PM's largest volume improvement in four years and the highest market share any cigarette company has achieved since 1931," Mr. Maxwell said. The Marlboro brand has nearly a 25% market share, up 1.3 share points from 1987. The Marlboro line drew $119.3 million in measured spending, up 18.4%. Merit drew a similar increase of 19.4% to $55.2 million as PM cut spending for Virginia Slims by 29.7% to $32 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

PM in 1988 began trading on the Marlboro name with new entries. Marlboro Menthol that rolled out in 1989 and Marlboro Ultra Lights, went into test.

PM, which had largely stayed away from controversial new cigarette introductions such as RJR's Premier "smokeless" cigarette, did an about-face and began testing Next cigarette with trace amounts of nicotine in May 1989.

Responding to an upsurge in the price/value segment of the cigarette market, which gained 1.3 share points in 1988, according to Mr. Maxwell, PM repositioned Alpine, with an 0.1% overall market share in 1988, as a price/value entry. Price value cigarettes now account for 13.8% of the total cigarette market.

So far, the only product line to take advantage of the merging of Kraft and General Foods is GF's Culinova regionally-marketed refrigerated entree line currently in test. It has been folded into Kraft's Chillery line of salads, pastas and sauces, pizza kits, desserts and entrees, a brand also in test.

Kraft had just begun to focus solely on food with a corporate campaign themed, "Good food and good food ideas," at the time of the merger. It had sold, in May 1988, Duracell batteries to Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. and then in September, sold Celestial Seasonings to a management-led group supported by Vestar Capital Partners.

Kraft introduced—and later pulled—Eating Right, a 14-item line of low-calorie frozen entrees. Assigned to HDM, Los Angeles, the product was said to have too upscale an image and too high a price. Kraft has yet to announce plans to reintroduce Eating Right.

Both Kraft and GF turned their attention to the $1 billion side dish market in 1988 as Kraft began testing packaged pasta, potato and rice side dishes in its signature blue box packaging, and General Foods started tests of Minute Microwave, flavored rice and noodle products packaged in microwaveable trays. The company also introduced regionally Ronzoni Classics, a dry packaged product with a sauce packet.

Kraft also launched a cholesterol-free mayonnaise to go up against CPC International's new Hellmann's Cholesterol-Free Mayonnaise which rolled national in early 1989.

GF rolled out two big-budget cereal products in 1989, Post Honey Bunches of Oats with a $27 million ad budget and a $20 million-plus campaign for Post Oat Flakes hoping to increase share by capitalizing on amazing growth of oat bran cereals. Oat bran cereals currently account for 20% of cold cereal sales; the overall cereal market is valued at $6.5 billion. Post cereals got $107 million in measured media, same as in 1987.

But unlike other oat bran cereal marketers, notably General Mills and Quaker, Post has carefully avoided health claims.

Still, GF will have to work hard to beat out other cereal players: Its 12% share trails Kellogg at 41.1% and General Mills' 21.3%, according to County NatWest analyst Timothy Ramey.

Despite a 1.2% decline in frozen novelty sales in 1988 to $1.75 billion, GF remained committed to the category, introducing three new products in 1989 that trade on established brand names: Jell-O Citrus Snowburst; Baker's Fudgetastics; Kool-Aid Kool Pops.

Fueled by the continuing "Wacky, Wild, Kool-Aid Style" campaign, Kool-Aid boosted its share of the $800 million powdered soft drink market to 82.2%, its first major share gain in more than a decade. No. 2 is Thomas J. Lipton's Wyler's. The Kool-Aid line received $17.3 million in media, up 97% from 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

The company's Oscar Mayer unit also instituted a new agency compensation system which reduces the basic commission rate to about 13.5% and includes bonus payments based upon the unit's sales and profit performance. Oscar Mayer and Louis Rich lines spent a combined $48 million in media, same as in 1987.

The company also posted major gains in the refrigerated desserts with Jell-O refrigerated puddings, the runaway leader in the $156.3 million refrigerated pudding category. GF holds about 50% of the category, which jumped 125% in sales in 1988, according to Arbitron/SAMI figures. Beatrice/Hunt Wesson is No. 2.

Miller Brewing Co. increased its overall share in the U.S. beer market to 21.6% from 21.0%, still a distant second to Anheuser-Busch's 41.9%. The brewer's big success was Miller Genuine Draft. Its market share grew to 1.9%, up from 1.2% in 1987, according to Beverage Industry magazine.

But Miller High Life did not do as well despite an increase of 14% in media spending to $90.5 million, according to LNA/Arbitron. High Life's share dropped from 5% to 4.5%. In November 1988, Miller moved the account from JWT, New York, to Burnett.

Miller is continuing to test line extensions of both Genuine Draft and Miller Lite, and the company is working on a more strategic focus in its advertising, including ads specifically geared to U.S. regions. Miller tested one such project in Texas in 1989.

Philips NV, the European electronic giant, moved to greatly expand its presence and visibility in the U.S. in 1988.

The company, best known in the U.S. for marketing consumer products under such names as Norelco, Magnavox, Philco and Sylvania audio and video products, expanded marketing and advertising of products under its own name. Most notable so far are pushes for lightbulbs and upper-end consumer electronics gear.

Marketing under the Philips name should give a product expanded visibility because of Philips' worldwide presence, and will offer marketing efficiencies, including linking such products as Philips light bulbs and Philips TVs in ads.

Philips has so far killed off few of its American brand names. Only when it bought Westinghouse Lighting in 1983 did it follow (in 1986) with elimination of a brand name. Instead Philips has introduced its name on new products or new lines of existing products, some developed originally for Europe.

The increasing importance of the U.S. to Philips has been stated repeatedly by company officers who may see the U.S. market as an answer to increasingly competitive pressures 1992 will bring to Europe. Also, the U.S. market accounts for 40% to 50% of the world's consumer electronics sales.

Currently, North American Philips (NAP) represents $5.9 billion or about 20% of worldwide Philips NV revenues. Philips wants NAP to achieve the same 30%-to-50% market shares in the U.S. that Philips has in Europe.

In the last year, Philips, which in 1987 acquired the 42% part of North American Philips Corp. it didn't already own, has moved to more fully integrate its U.S. activities into its worldwide product and marketing mix. Its U.S. product divisions now work more directly with those in Europe in planning new products and production, although advertising still remains largely autonomous.

New products designed in the U.S. have been exported to Europe and vice versa.

Philips policies have shown some signs of success in the U.S. Backed by aggressive ad spending on its Magnavox line of TVs using the Smothers Brothers as ad spokesmen, Philips saw market share of color TVs rise to 10.7% from 9.5% in the last year, according to Television Digest. It also has begun pushing its line of CD players, a product it invented, and filled out the Philips line of upper end TVs.

In lighting, where Philips Lighting media ad budget jumped more than 25% to over $12 million, it introduced a line of pastel lights that offer a hint of color to expand its No. 2 share of 18% in the U.S. lightbulb market.

In small appliances, Norelco Consumer Products Co. has seen its share of men's electric razors sales rise to 50% from 48%, and its share of ladies' shavers to 35% from 25% from 1987 to 1988. Media advertising grew more than 60% to $17 million. Its CleanAir filtering machines have risen to 35% of the market, up from 30% to 32%.

Norelco this fall will increase advertising for men's razors, kick off its first national advertising for women's electric shavers and introduce a line of EZ Irons offering better steam control, also with heavy advertising. Norelco says ad spending this year may double 1988 outlays.

Philips moved to expand its presence in the U.S. home computer market in 1988 by acquiring Vendex Technologies, a maker of personal computers under the HeadStart brand, from Vendex International. Renamed HeadStart Technologies, the company this fall introduces the Explorer line of computers, which will sell for $599 and get hefty ad support. Philips Consumer Electronics lone entry in the field had been the Magnavox word processors.

Philips now markets in virtually every major consumer electronics product category in the U.S. except for facsimile machines and cellular phones. Both of those lines may come in the next year.

With its attention increasingly directed toward consumer electronics, Philips split off unrelated businesses. Most went to another NAP division, Consolidated Electronics Industries Corp., headed by former NAP Chairman-CEO Cees Bruynes.

Unstated in that move is Philips' apparent desire to sell off those businesses. One, the Selmer Co., which makes musical instruments, already has been sold, and Philips has announced it has hired an investment banker to evaluate the sale of Magnavox Government and Industrial Electronics Co. The fate of the two remaining consumer businesses in the subsidiary, Anchor Brush Co, which makes toothbrushes, and Genie Co., which makes garage doors and shop vacuum cleaners, remains uncertain.

Philips also participates in a number of joint ventures in the U.S. and is 90% owner of Polygram records.

Procter & Gamble Co. in 1988 followed the industry trend of introducing less expensive and less risky line-extensions instead of major new products. At the same time, P&G's sales increased 11% and its ad and promotional spending rose 15.4%.

"Other than the prospect of a significant restaging of Pampers in the U.S. due to lackluster market-share, there may be little major incremental advertising or new product activity in the next year to 18 months," said Jack Salzman, household-products analyst with Goldman Sachs & Co., New York.

Most of P&G's momentum is coming from abroad, where sales accounted for 40% of the total and will represent 50% within five years, the company said.

P&G forged a number of international agreements. It linked with STC Corp. to sell products in Korea; bought a majority interest in Nelsen S.p.A., a liquid detergent company in Gattatico, Italy; acquired a controlling interest in Perfumeria Phebo S.A., a Sao Paulo, Brazil, cleaning and personal-care products company; formed joint ventures with Industrias Mammi, C.A., a personal care products company in Caracas, Venezuela, and with Hutchison Whampoa Ltd., Hong Kong, to manufacture and distribute products in China through the Guangzhou Soap Factory.

P&G continued its drive to build its food and beverage division by acquiring in March 1989 the Sundor Group, the sixth-largest U.S. maker of citrus and other fruit beverages, including Sunny Delight Florida Citrus Punch, Speas Farm apple juice and Texun pink grapefruit juice. P&G in late July 1989 agreed to buy the Fisher Nut business from Beatrice Foods, which will enable P&G to build on its Jif peanut butter and salted snack businesses.

P&G also sold Crush International (Crush, Hires, Sun-drop, Gini brands) soft-drink division to Cadbury Schweppes PLC for $220 million. Under the P&G banner, Crush never made much of an impact in the soft-drink category.

The company in early 1989 implemented a category management system at subsidiary Richardson-Vicks. The OTC drug and personal-care unit is the last group at P&G to shift from the product brand-management system that characterized the company from 1931 to 1987. Brands handled by R-V were divided into three categories: cough-cold, personal care/skincare and analgesics. The category management system groups all brands and products in a particular category under the direction of one general manager.

P&G also reinforced its desire to get better media choices and creative work out of its agencies by instituting a new compensation plan that rewards agencies' creativity and media choices.

The new compensation system, implemented companywide in July 1989, keeps the 15% commission rate on traditional media and adds a fee payment for new-product work. The 15% also will be paid for creative work done for promotional vehicles and for ads in alternative media. The company is turning increasingly to non-traditional media—from posters in schools and doctor's offices to ads on prerecorded videocassettes to P&G-sponsored sporting events.

In December 1988, P&G shifted three OTC drug brands to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles—Percogesic, Dramamine and Icy Hot, worth an estimated $6 million in billings—from Slater Hanft Martin. DMB&B in the late 1980s has emerged as P&G's premier OTC-drug agency.

In April 1989, Tatham-Laird & Kudner, Chicago, got Vicks Throat drops from DMB&B and Chloraseptic sore-throat spray from Leo Burnett USA. Tatham-Laird, one of the smaller agencies on P&G's roster, is responsible for Metamucil, a psyllium-based laxative that P&G hopes eventually to market as a cholesterol-reducing aid. P&G in April 1989 began a new ad campaign that compared the fiber in Metamucil with that of oat bran. The laxative commands more than half of the $300 million bulk-fiber laxative market. Measured media spending behind Metamucil rose 34% to $12.7 million.

The company this August moved Top Job household cleaner to Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor from Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, both New York. Top Job, which has a 2% share of the $1 billion household-cleaner category, received nominal media support.

Following public concern over palm oil in food products, P&G in January 1989 removed palm oil from Crisco shortening. Crisco in 1988 was backed with $5.7 million in measured media spending, a 52.4% drop from 1987.

In the $916 million cooking-oil market, P&G's Crisco and Puritan hold a combined 24% share. Puritan, made of canola (rapeseed) grain, in 1989 won endorsement from the American College of Nutrition for the lowest saturated fat. The ACN endorsement began appearing in mid-summer on Puritan labels and in Puritan's $4.4 million ad campaign.

Having gained a toehold in the potato chip segment with Pringle's, P&G now intends to eat away at Frito-Lay's dominance in corn chips with the mid-1989 national launch of Pringle's Corn Crisps, which are stacked in canisters like its potato chips. Pringles has a 75% share of the $300 million canister segment.

Activity in P&G's Duncan Hines line, the No. 2 baking-mix line in the U.S. behind General Mills, was limited to the March 1989 introduction of two oat-bran muffin mixes and advertising for the Duncan Hines Tiara Desserts line. Measured spending declined 27% to $13 million in 1988.

After acquiring the Sundor family of citrus fruit beverages, P&G in June 1989 introduced nationally Citrus Hill Lite Premium chilled juice beverage. Citrus Hill was backed with $20.5 million in measured spending, up 19%.

With coffee consumption continuing to decline, P&G spent $65 million on Folgers to hold a 30% share in the $2.8 billion ground coffee segment, according to Kidder, Peabody & Co., New York.

P&G rolled out a Folgers "fast-roast" blend. Fast-roasting "fluffs" beans to the point where 13 ounces by weight equals 16 ounces by volume. The company is testing a non-100% Colombian coffee named Folgers Gourmet Supreme to compete against General Foods' Maxwell House Colombian Supreme.

In April, the Folgers account was consolidated at N W Ayer, New York, as P&G moved Gourmet Supreme from Wells, Rich, Greene, New York.

P&G backed its Crest toothpaste line with $32 million in measured media, a 20% decline. Spending behind Sparkle Crest for Kids climbed 22% to $9.7 million to counter Colgate-Palmolive's $9 million introduction of Colgate Junior toothpaste and toothbrushes. C-P pulled within striking distance of P&G's position as leader of the $1 billion toothpaste category; Crest holds a 36% share to Colgate's 33%.

P&G's Downy fabric-softener got added category support with the introduction of SunRinse Fresh Downy liquid fabric softener. Downy dryer sheets and Bounce with Staingard. P&G commands 60% of the $725 million category. Downy's spending in media more than doubled to $40.7 million. Bounce drew $18 million, up 16%.

P&G remains the leader in the $3 billion laundry detergent category with a 51% share. In January 1989 P&G nationally expanded Tide With Bleach. P&G, which increased Tide media spending 27% to $25.4 million, introduced the version primarily to counter Clorox Co.'s steady expansion of bleach-enriched Clorox detergent. P&G discontinued market test of Lemon Fresh Comet liquid bleach.

In late 1988, P&G began testing Cheer Free, a detergent with no dyes or perfumes for people with sensitive skin. Cheer ad spending rose 25% to $12.2 million.

In the $475 million automatic dishwasher detergent category, P&G's Cascade powder was upgraded to increase solubility. Cascade, with a 52% share of category, was supported with $13 million in media spending, down 22%.

P&G's share of the $650 light-duty dishwashing detergent category fell 1.5 points to 50.5%, although its Dawn remained market leader with a 23% share. Measured spending remained steady at $9 million.

P&G in October introduced nationally Luvs Deluxe disposable diapers designed differently for boys and girls. The diapers, backed with $15 million in ad spending, pushed Luvs' share of the $3.5 billion category to 20%. At the same time, P&G began testing Luvs Deluxe prints for boys and girls. P&G's share of the category dropped 5.5 points to 49.5% due to declining sales of Ultra Pampers. Archrival Kimberly-Clark Corp.'s Huggies has built a strong 33.5% share.

P&G supported Ultra Pampers with $18

How to pinpoint prospects...

and build a sophisticated database for repeat sales.

Introducing the Response TargetChek™ system, a first-rate way to reach the right consumers, motivate them to buy, and keep them coming back for more.

A database you can bank on.
With the Response TargetChek system, your message slides through the mailslot of the consumers most likely to buy. That's because the Response TargetChek system is a direct marketing tool that is also the basis for building a highly accurate database.

We start with an in-depth marketing analysis to ensure that your very first mailing is targeted to the right audience. Then, with customer data you collect from each mailing, you can drive follow-up mailings and cross sell with pinpoint accuracy.

The check is in the mail; consumers are in the store.
There is nothing like cash to put people in the mood to buy. The Response TargetChek system includes an actual bank check that is highly effective at cutting through coupon clutter. What's more, a check has a higher perceived value than a coupon for a few cents off.

Designed to sell.
Every component of a Response TargetChek mailing is customized to your market and message. Response Graphics' state-of-the-art technology allows you to personalize your mailing and vary the color, size and graphics. Best of all, you can use the check as a questionnaire to elicit valuable data from consumers upon redemption.

Quick redemption is a redeeming value.
On the retail level, the Response TargetChek system moves cash as fast as it moves products. Retailers get immediate cash redemption through the banking system, rather than waiting months for coupons to pay off through a clearing house.

Honest-to-goodness redemption.
For manufacturers, the Response TargetChek system virtually eliminates trade fraud and solves the rebate problem.

million in measured media, down 34%, while Luvs got $17.4 million, down 14%. P&G in June announced it will fund projects to recycle the plastic from disposable diapers.

P&G's Always feminine-protection line received $10.7 million in measured spending, a 38.5% drop. P&G in July 1989 introduced nationally Always Double Plus, two-pad protection in one. Despite heavy promotional spending, Always maintained its 25.2% share of the $1.2 billion sanitary napkin category. Johnson & Johnson is the category leader at 35%.

P&G added two new White Cloud varieties—fragrance-free and spring breeze scent—to its bathroom tissue line and began testing Charmin Care with baby lotion. P&G also markets Charmin Free, a bathroom tissue without ink, dye or perfume. P&G has a 30.5% share of the $2.3 billion category, up 4 points from 1987. Measured spending behind White Cloud climbed 15% to $5.8 million.

P&G increased measured spending 78% to $6.8 million for Bounty paper towels, the leading brand in the $1.5 billion category.

P&G commands a 32.5% share of the $925 million shampoo category, with Head & Shoulders category leader with a 10.5% share. P&G, backing the brand with $20 million in media in 1988, introduced Head & Shoulders Dry Scalp shampoo this month. It also introduced Ivory Free shampoo and conditioner, which contains neither perfume nor dye. Ivory got $6.8 million in measured media in 1988, a 31% increase.

P&G in 1988 launched a new wide solid for both its Sure and Secret antiperspirant/deodorant brands, and redesigned Secret's packaging to increase its appeal to women. P&G commands 26% of the $1.05 billion category. Secret's spending jumped 59% to $19 million, and spending for Sure rose 31% to $17.9 million.

Under new owner P&G, the upscale Bain de Soleil suncare line moved up to a 6.8% share of the $415 million food-store suntan lotion market from 2.6% in 1987. Measured spending behind Bain de Soleil rose from $1.7 million to $5.2 million, reflecting the brand's expanded distribution. P&G also added high SPF protection products to the line under the Protecteur Gentil label.

P&G in 1989 added two items to its Oil of Olay brand: Sensitive Skin Beauty Fluid and Intensive Moisture Complex. Oil of Olay, backed with $32.5 million in media, up 19%, is the leading mass-market facial lotion with a 28% share of the $640 million market at retail.

Spending behind P&G's Pepto-Bismol stomach remedy rose 35% to $27 million, with some of the increase earmarked for the national introduction of Maximum Strength Pepto-Bismol. The brand commands 18% of the $360 million antacid category, leading Beecham Products' Tums' 13%.

Vicks cough-cold remedies received $18.6 million in measured media, up 2%. Nyquil is the leading remedy with a 12% share of the $1.4 billion category for cough, cold and sinus remedies.

In June 1989, P&G announced the retirement of Thomas Laco, vice chairman. Robert E. Cannon was elected senior VP, from group VP, assuming Mr. Laco's worldwide responsibility for the company's quality programs. Gerald V. Dirvin was elected senior VP from group VP, assuming responsibility for most of the company's staff functions—including advertising, marketing services and public affairs—from Mr. Laco.

Quaker Oats Co. is shoring up top management and trimming down to stay financially independent and competitive in the supermarket. The net effect on advertising and marketing will be smaller increases in spending.

Quaker will halve the 20% to 25% budget increases it has seen for the past several years, to a 10% to 12% increase this year, Chairman-CEO William Smithburg told analysts.

Quaker also in July laid off 170 salaried employees in the U.S. grocery products group and closed a pet food plant in Marion, Ohio, in its drive to increase profitability.

Earlier this year, Quaker sold the Ghirardelli chocolate business it acquired as part of Golden Grain Co. It added Continental Coffee Co. to its foodservice division, and acquired rights to market a line of dry-grocery products under the Pritikin name. Mr. Smithburg also said Quaker is interested in buying RJR Nabisco units.

Quaker entered one entirely new category—the $125 million frozen sandwich market—when it began testing Old Town OvenStuffs last summer. The six-item line contains two French rolls stuffed with Italian fillings, two croissant-dough turnovers and two pita-bread sandwiches. After it moved into test last fall, the line was reassigned from J. Walter Thompson USA to Bayer Bess Vanderwarker, both Chicago.

Quaker hopes the sandwiches have better luck in the freezer than its Aunt Jemima lines. Despite a new, "contemporary" portrait of the 100-year-old spokeswoman, Quaker's frozen Aunt Jemima franchise registered a 25% unit-volume decline during the most recent fiscal year. Two new products, Aunt Jemima Lite frozen pancakes and dry pancake mix, failed to boost sales for the brand.

Likewise, pet food presents a challenge. Quaker's share of the $3.6 billion dog food market is falling across the board. Quaker's share was down from 16% to 14.9% for the year ending June, said County NatWest Securities analyst Timothy Ramey.

Quaker's Ken-L Ration and King Kuts brands accounted for 17.3% of the canned dog food market, down from 18.1%; Quaker's share of dry dog food fell to 13.2% from 13.6%. And in the semi-moist category where Quaker's Ken-L Ration and Gaines brands traditionally have dominated, its share fell to 52% from 59.3% while Ralston Purina's increased to 29% from 20%.

Quaker in February pulled Cycle and Gravy Train from Chiat/Day/Mojo, New York, which had handled the brands before Quaker's acquisition. The $8 million Cycle account was assigned to Thompson, and the $10 million-plus Gravy Train account moved to Bayer Bess.

Quaker tried to turn around its granola bar business by adding oat bran to two varieties of Quaker Chewy Granola Bars, and in September launching a new print advertising and public relations campaign aimed at mothers. Still, unit sales were down 20% in the just-ended fiscal year.

Quaker's fourth-place share of the $6 billion ready-to-eat cereal category increased to 8.3%, largely on the strong showings of Oh!s and Quaker Oat Squares; each has a 1% share.

Quaker made its long-awaited entry into the oat-bran derby with a ready-to-eat version of its Quaker Oat Bran that was launched in about 30% of the U.S. in May. An estimated $20 million TV and print campaign, themed "Oat bran from the expert," is supporting the introduction, via Bayer Bess Vanderwarker.

Quaker continued its commitment to building the hot-cereal category with an estimated $16 million in measured media behind its instant and standard oatmeal products.

One of the biggest questions for Quaker is how far and fast it can expand Gatorade. Since Quaker acquired it, Gatorade sales have increased 30% annually, to $350 million in 1988.

In July, Quaker promoted Philip Marineau, 42, to exec VP of its U.S. grocery products division from exec VP-international grocery products. He is credited with making Gatorade Quaker's No. 1 brand.

New product introductions by Ralston Purina in the pet fotod and cold cereal markets—both worth $5.9 billion at retail—kept encroachment from competitors at a minimum during 1988.

Ralston will enter the baby food business late this year with the recent buyout of troubled Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp. from Nestle. Beech-Nut holds 17.4% of the baby food market, down from 20% three years ago just prior to its indictment and subsequent conviction for selling adulterated and mislabeled apple juice.

Ralston, which declined 0.2 share points in the overall pet food market to 28.3%, introduced two dog snacks—Ribz and Beggin' Strips—in the $420 million pet treat segment.

Ralston added Pro Plan dog food to the specialty lines offered exclusively in pet food stores and veterinarians' offices. The entry in the $700 million superpremium dog food niche was supported with FSIs (created in-house) in major-market newspapers. Ralston holds a 27.2% share in the overall $3.6 billion market, according to John C. Maxwell Jr., analyst with Wheat First Securities.

Ralston released Kitten Chow Dairy Formula, packaged in imitation milk cartons, and rolled out Cat Chow Plus, the feline version of its successful Purina O.N.E. product for dogs. Both new products are expected to strengthen Ralston's 31% share in the $2.1 billion cat food market, according to Mr. Maxwell.

Ralston moved its $10 million Dog Chow account in 1988 from Wells, Rich, Greene, New York, which had handled the account for 15 years, to in-house agency Centra Advertising.

Ralston introduced four new cereals in the $5.9 billion cold cereal market where its share declined 0.2 points to 5.9%.

Ralston Muesli was introduced in mid-1988 with a network and spot TV campaign. Bran News was launched with an estimated $5 million-to-$10 million multimedia campaign.

Dinersaurs hit the market with heavy TV support, as well as FSIs and a promotional tie-in with the release of World Events Productions' "Denver, the Last Dinosaur" cartoon TV special. A subsequent deal with Fries Home Video resulted in a 30-second spot for Dinersaurs appearing in the "Denver" video. Dunkin' Donuts cereal, the result of a licensing agreement between Ralston and the doughnut chain, rolled out in late summer 1988 with a multimedia campaign.

Continental Baking Co. offered four varieties of Oatmeal goodness bread as its response to the oat bran craze and expanded its snack cake line with the addition of Hostess Pudding Cakes and Hostess Fruit and Creme Twinkies.

Eveready introduced its Conductor line of alkaline batteries for audio devices and its Lithium-plus AA battery, as well as a line of 11 home safety and security products dubbed Eversafe.

Eveready repositioned its products last year, creating Eveready Classic batteries and Eveready Super Heavy-Duty batteries, as well as the Conductor line.

Overall, however, Eveready lost ground in the $2.5 billion battery market, prompting it to pull its $25 million Energizer account from DDB Needham early this year, reassigning it to Chiat/Day/Mojo. In the past two years, Eveready's share in the alkaline battery market has slid from 52% to 45%, a drop attributed to increased Revlon launched 63 new products in 1988, including new lines obtained in buyouts and marketing agreements.

Visage Beaute Cosmetics Co., specialists in custom-blended makeup and maker of color cosmetics, was purchased for an undisclosed price in August 1988.

In November, Revlon entered into an agreement with Guess? Inc. to market fragrances and cosmetics under the Guess? name. The new line of products is expected out starting at the beginning of 1990.

Then in April 1989 Revlon acquired Betrix Cosmetic Cos. from HM Betrix, West Germany. Earlier, Revlon had gained U.S. marketing rights to Biagiotti fragrances and cosmetics. The Laura Biagiotti Roma line was launched exclusively at Neiman-Marcus last October.

At the beginning of this year, Revlon became the global licensee for Arnold Scassi's signature fragrance, Scassi, which it assigned to Peter Rogers Associates, New York.

Major agency upheavals occurred recently in Revlon's agency assignments, beginning this past January when Tarlow Advertising, New York, became the agency of record for the $11 million Almay account, which had been with Korey, Kay & Partners, New York.

Revlon moved its prestige fragrance brands in-house from Korey, Kay in March 1989. The brands represent $8-$10 million in billings and include such names as Halston, Bill Blass, Hugo Boss, Claude Montana and Norell.

Revlon purchased Tarlow Advertising outright in July and named agency President Dick Tarlow exec VP-advertising. In August it moved Charlie and Trouble fragrances, and the Clean & Clear and Nutrasome haircare lines in-house to its Creative Workshop and Tarlow. All came from Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, and represented about $15 million in billings, the largest being the $7 million Clean & Clear account.

At the same time, Sudler & Hennessey, New York, lost two accounts to Revlon's in-house agencies—the Flex haircare line and Mitchum antiperspirants. Together they are worth more than $3.6 million in billings.

Revlon's "Unforgettable Women" campaign maintained a strong media presence in 1989, as new, familiar faces were introduced, including male spokespersons, actor Frank Langella and football star Joe Montana.

Hoping to bolster its department store presence, Revlon embarked on the second year of "The Nines" concept, introduced last year as part of a three-year-effort to link Revlon's prestige makeup, skincare and fragrance brands. Analysts say Revlon has yet to see significant gains from "The Nines" effort.

Ultima II's new president, former Vogue beauty editor Andrea Robinson, together with photographer Irving Penn and Bob Nielsen, chairman of Revlon's Fashion & Designer Group, designed a print campaign for the line that boasts neither copy, product shot nor model faces. Instead, the Ultima name is spelled out on successive pages in color makeup. The aim of Ultima's efforts is to develop customer loyalty by offering shades suited to the woman, not to the season.

Revlon's Creative Workshop launched a campaign in May for a new Ultima product, The Moisturizer, stressing standard benefits—hypo-allergenic, non-irritating, fragrance-free.

The company has held its own in mass-marketed cosmetics, though all three of the top players—Noxell, Schering-Plough's Maybelline and Revlon—lost some ground to smaller marketers.

As of April 1989, Revlon was third in the mass-market category at 13.8%, down slightly from 1988. Noxell continued to lead with a 21% share followed by Maybelline at 18.5%, according to Lynne Hyman, analyst with First Boston Corp.

Revlon's decline was attributed to lower sales of its nail and lip products, categories which competitors have been promoting heavily.

Revlon, among the top three fragrance marketers in the U.S., along with Avon Products and Estee Lauder Inc., introduced Electric Youth by Debbie Gibson (the singer) fragrance in August through drug stores, traditionally a strong distribution point for Revlon. That Man fragrance for men was brought out by Tarlow in September.

Matthew Rubel was appointed president of the newly-established specialty store division, which incorporates the Marcella di Borghese, Alexandra de Markoff, Jeanne Gastineau and Lancaster lines.

The company is expected to generate over $3 billion in revenue in 1989 from cosmetics fragrances and its National Health Laboratories.

The debt burden resulting from the $25 billion buyout of RJR Nabisco to Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. is being felt at both R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. and Nabisco Brands, where ad spending has been slashed until at least this fall.

Even before the December 1988 acquisition—the largest in U.S.—RJR Nabisco's ad spending had been on the decline each year since 1985 when it recorded an estimated $996 million.

As a result of the acquisition, RJRN tightened its belt at its Winston-Salem, N.C.-based tobacco unit, dismissing 1,640 salaried employees in August 1989. The bloodletting is expected to spill over into the unit's marketing department, where some rejuggling of positions is believed imminent.

The first sign of those changes is the institution of a new brand management system at RJR Tobacco, in which teams work on each brand. Through the new system, other departments, including manufacturing, finance, sales planning and research development, work in tandem with brand managers.

In an effort to pay back debt incurred in the buyout, KKR planned to divest some of the company's food businesses, worth $5 billion, by 1990. To date, KKR has sold or has contracts to sell $4.5 billion worth of businesses.

Chun King went to a Singapore-based joint venture, Yeo Hiap Seng Ltd. and Fullerton Holdings Pte. Ltd., for $52 million. Several European cookie/cracker operations were sold to BSN Groupe, Paris, for $2.5 billion, including U.K. biscuit operations and Belin Group, a French pastry operation. Last month RJR retained Lazard Freres & Co. to explore the sale of its 20% interest in cable network ESPN.

KKR agreed this month to sell Del Monte fresh fruits and vegetables business to Polly Peck International, London, for $875 million, and is negotiating to sell Del Monte's canned food and processing businesses worldwide except in Canada for a possible $1.5 billion.

Early in 1989, the Federal Trade Commission advised KKR to sell one of its catsup businesses, because it could not keep its Del Monte and Beatrice's Hunt-Wesson brands in its larder.

Analysts anticipate that perhaps part of the Planters LifeSavers confection division will become another casualty.

RJRN reshuffled executives as a result of the merger. Chairman F. Ross Johnson and RJR Tobacco Chairman-President-CEO Edward Horrigan left the company. Mr. Johnson was succeeded by former American Express Co. President Louis V. Gerstner Jr. Company headquarters were then moved to New York from Atlanta.

Dolph von Arx, president-CEO of RJR Tobacco USA, moved to chairman-president-CEO of Planters LifeSavers. Then, in August 1989, David Iauco was named senior VP-marketing, RJR Tobacco, succeeding John Winebrenner, who moved to senior VP-marketing, RJR Tobacco International.

By the time of the buyout, RJRN already had made major changes in its agency roster, firing Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising on its $70 million cookie account. That was reportedly to "punish" the agency for creating an anti-smoking ad for another client, Northwest Airlines. The firing prompted a realignment of agencies, with tobacco agencies FCB/Leber Katz Partners and McCann-Erickson gaining most of the business.

Tatham-Laird & Kudner and Bozell Inc. were dropped from RJRN's roster. FCB/Leber Katz Partners picked up $90 million in Nabisco business, including Oreo and Chips Ahoy! cookies, Fleischmann's margarine (from TLK) and LifeSavers (from Saatchi).

Long Haymes & Carr, Winston-Salem, N.C., which already handled Doral cigarettes, also was assigned the $4 million Bubble Yum account previously at Saatchi.

Interpublic Group of Cos. agencies Lowe Marschalk and Lintas:USA also picked up business. Lowe received the $4 million Ortega foods unit formerly held by TLK, and Lintas received $25 million in Planters nuts and snacks.

However, in summer 1989, Interpublic's gains were more than offset by losses when RJR Tobacco fired its McCann-Erickson unit on both Camel and Winston cigarettes. McCann had created a campaign for Camel, reviving the brand's longtime symbol, Old Joe the Camel, with a breezy tongue-in-cheek new look. But the agency's effort for Winston, with sports imagery and the theme "Winning Taste," did not work as well.

According to Wheat First Securities analyst John Maxwell, Winston's 1988 market share was 10.8%, down from 11.1% a year earlier. The brand has been steadily losing share since 1984. Media spending also dipped 21% to $30.8 million, according to LNA/Arbitron, putting Winston spending below that of Salem at $35.3 million, up 145%.

FCB/Leber Katz Partners was assigned Winston and Young & Rubicam, New York, was given Camel. Sources said spending for both brands should resume normal levels—up to 50% more than what RJR spent in 1988—by year's end 1989. Camel in 1988 drew $24.4 million, up 52.5%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Camel's share inched up in 1988, according to Mr. Maxwell, ending with a 2.8% share, up from 2.7% a year earlier. Salem finished the year at 7.4%, down from 7.7%, according to Mr. Maxwell. It received a major new promotional/advertising push, estimated at $35 million. Themed "Salem Soundwaves," the campaign, from FCB/Leber Katz's Integrated Communications Group, broke in April 1989.

Although RJR pulled its Premier "smokeless" cigarette out of test market in March 1989 over pressure from health groups, the company did not stop trying new twists in cigarette marketing in 1988-89.

Soon after Premier was snuffed out, RJR began testing Vantage Excel 100s in Arkansas, Michigan and Louisiana. The brand emits less smoke than regular cigarettes, and is aimed at addressing smokers' concerns about upsetting nonsmokers. FCB/Leber Katz Partners handles advertising, with headlines announcing "The barrier's broken."

Only two months later, in February 1989, RJR began testing Chelsea cigarettes, a female-targeted smoke which emits a vanilla scent from the lit end. Ads touted the brand as "the first cigarette that smells good" and included a scratch-and-sniff panel, an industry first.

RJR, however, remained well behind Philip Morris Cos. in the overall cigarette market, with a 31.8% share in 1988 compared to PM's 39.3%, Mr. Maxwell said. But RJR, with its Doral and Magna brands, leads PM in the price-value segment of the market, with a 39% share compared to PM's 30%, he said. Price value cigarettes account for 11.4% of the market.

Despite the uncertain environment surrounding the takeover, RJR went ahead with plans for an image ad campaign for Nabisco Brands.

The $5 million effort, created by three Nabisco agencies—FCB/LKP, Lowe Marschalk and McCann-Erickson, broke Jan. 2. The campaign's TV spots pictured Nabisco products as a part of American life.

In October 1988, Nabisco adopted an incentive compensation system for agencies somewhat similar to the incentive compensation package adopted at RJR's tobacco unit nine months earlier.

The system, applying to Nabisco Biscuit Co., Nabisco Foods Co., Del Monte Foods USA and Planters LifeSavers, made agencies eligible for bonuses of from 5% to 20% of revenue based on their performance relative to marketing goals agreed upon at the beginning of the year. The base compensation rate was not disclosed, but it was said to be more than 10% but less than 15%.

Nabisco Biscuit continued to perform well in 1988 as it tallied an estimated $2.1 billion in sales, giving it a 34% share of the $6 billion domestic cookie and cracker industry, well ahead of No. 2, Keebler at 16.3%, according to Snack Food magazine.

Nabisco also held just over 50% of domestic industry-wide cracker sales. During 1988-89, the company introduced line extensions of several cookie brands, including Chips Ahoy! Premium Select, an upscale line to compete with Pepperidge Farm.

Nabisco's Teddy Grahams, introduced nationally in 1988, also were a rousing success, ringing up $85 million in sales at manufacturer's level, and giving Nabisco the No. 3 brand in the market. (Nabisco already controlled No. 1 with Oreos and No. 2 with Chips Ahoy!) Shaped like tiny teddy bears and marketed in flavors such as cinnamon and chocolate, the graham-based bears are handled by FCB/Leber Katz.

The company rode on the bite-size bandwagon with Ritz Bits, bite-size versions of Ritz crackers, and peanut-butter filled versions of Ritz Bits. Nabisco Brands President-CEO H. John Greeniaus said the company is working on introducing a bite-size version of Oreos. Such spinoffs, notes Snack Food, are probably the only path Nabisco's product development teams could take and are likely to pursue in the near term, given the heavy debt load of the parent.

The other bandwagon Nabisco jumped on was oat bran, introducing Wholesome 'N Hearty Oat Bran and an instant version of the same in 1989, and a cold cereal line extension, 100% Bran with Oat Bran. FCB/LKP handles both.

Sara Lee continued to build market share in its three highly segmented business areas by buying and selling companies and interconnecting its diverse product lines with marketing programs.

This February it purchased Hygrade Food Products Corp., Southfield, Mich., a subsidiary of Britain's Hanson PLC. Hygrade had 1988 sales of $245 million in beef and poultry wieners, turkey luncheon meats, bacon and ham sold under the Ball Park, Hygrade, Grillmaster and West Virginia brand names.

Hygrade's Ball Park hot dogs, 50% of its sales, gives the company 12% of the U.S. frankfurter market to add to Sara Lee's 9%, both behind leader Oscar Mayer, the Philip Morris unit with a share reported as high as 25%. Important to Sara Lee's larger strategy of linking strong national and regional brands, this acquisition joins Jimmy Dean and Hillshire Farm as Sara Lee's third national brand.

The same month, Sara Lee strengthened its fleecewear and athletic clothing line now concentrated around Hanes Printables by buying Champion Products, Rochester, N.Y. Champion, with 1988 sales of $219 million, gives Sara Lee a 17.5% share of U.S. sales in fleecesweats and other athletic wear, compared to its own 4%.

Divestitures continued as a part of Sara Lee's plans to focus on its three business segments—packaged foods, foodservice and packaged consumer products. It sold in October 1988 its Hollywood Brands (Zero, Butternut, Pay Day candy bars), to Leaf Inc., Chicago. Then in December, the company sold the 63-unit Lyon's Restaurant chain, based in Foster City, Calif., to a management-led investors group.

In 1988 it also divested Peck Food Corp., Milwaukee, a processor of fresh meats, to Gillett Holdings, Nashville, and got rid of its sole electrical appliance producer, Electrolux vacuum cleaner division.

In Europe where its sales have grown to $2.3 billion, up 45% in three years compared to domestic growth of 28% in the same period, the company bought Van Nelle Holdings, N.V., Rotterdam and merged it into its expanding Douwe Egberts operations. Van Nelle markets a specialized grocery line including coffee, tea, tobacco and other products. Sara Lee in 1988 increased its share in DIM S.A., to 61%, and earlier this year applied to French authorities for approval to buy DIM's remaining shares. DIM, which has 50% of the French hosiery market, also makes underwear, and is sold in some U.S. outlets. Sara Lee is building a headquarters complex in Utrecht, The Netherlands.

Sara Lee continued to fine-tune its organization by consolidating and centralizing its big knitting and clothing business in Winston-Salem, N.C.

The Chef Pierre/Lloyd J. Harriss frozen pie business of Traverse City, Mich., combined in 1988 with Kitchens of Sara Lee to form the new Sara Lee Bakery, producer now of all the corporation's dessert and bread products.

Sara Lee "restructured" in mid-1989 its PYA/Monarch foodservice segment by selling off part of it in a management buyout that formed a new company, J.P. Food Service, and then entered a joint venture in August with competitor L.N. Sandler to form Consolidated Food Service. Both J.P. Food and Consolidated are licensed to sell Monarch brands and other PYA products. Cooperative working arrangements such as a common computer system link the companies.

The company in 1988 merged Jimmy Dean Meat Co., Dallas, and Rudy's Farm company, Nashville, under one sales and marketing arm with headquarters in Dallas. Likewise, Hillshire Farm, New London, Wis., and Kahn's & Co., Cincinnati, merged to form Hillshire Farm & Kahn's, based in Cincinnati. Consolidations were aimed at increasing production efficiency and cutting promotional duplication.

Sara Lee is showing its human face in more and more advertising. Entertainer and entrepreneur Jimmy Dean extols his leading market share sausage and his breakfast sandwiches in TV commercials. And the real Sara Lee—Mrs. Sara Lee Schupf—appears in testimonial spots for Sara Lee Bakery. Her late father, Charles W. Lubin, founder of Sara Lee, named his company's popular pound cake after her 40 years ago.

Pushing hard to outplay its Fruit of the Loom competition as the No. 1 men's underwear, Hanes this year signed on professional athletes, Chicago Bulls' Michael Jordan, Cincinnati Bengals' Boomer Esiason and San Francisco 49ers' Joe Montana, to brag up its skivvies, socks and athletic outfits. Long, Haymes & Carr, Winston-Salem, N.C., created the $25 million campaign, the biggest yet for Hanes men's/boys' underwear brands.

Umbrella campaigns, cross-branding advertising and tie-in promotions are naturals for many of Sara Lee's units. In fall 1988, Hanes underwear for women and Bali lingerie launched an umbrella campaign to promote the new Hanes Her Way line of panties and brassieres. In 1989, Pannill Knitting fleecewear, Adams Mills socks and Aris Isotoner knit coordinates were added to the cross-sell.

Bali even offered buyers of its bras and control briefs Sara Lee Bakery coupons redeemable for cheesecakes, croissants, etc.

Sara Lee's huge hosiery business (Hanes and L'eggs) which claims nearly 40% of the $2.2 billion U.S. market, drew $52.6 million in measured spending, up 11.9%, according to LNA/Arbitron. Of the total, the Hanes brand dipped 4.7% to $16.4 million, while L'eggs spending jumped 27.6% to $36.2 million. Hanes is the No. 1 brand in the women's hosiery market in department and specialty stores; L'eggs is No. 1 in food, drug and other mass-merchandising outlets. Overall, in 1988, Sara Lee had 36% of the total hosiery market, way ahead of No. 2 No Nonsense/Easy to Be Me with 11%. Hanes is No. 2 to Fruit of the Loom in both men's underwear and women's panties.

In the $1.7 billion department and specialty store market for bras and panties, Sara Lee ranked No. 2 with a 10.3% share for its Bali, Hanes Her Way and Just My Size brands. Playtex was No. 1 with 14.2%.

Expenditures for measured advertising of the Aris Isotoner brands of gloves, slippers and other wearables climbed 79% to nearly $27 million.

Sara Lee commands 33% of the $700 million U.S. smoked sausage market, well ahead of Eckrich with 17%. Its Jimmy Dean brand ranks No. 1 nationally in breakfast sausage with a 23% share. Next to hosiery, Sara Lee's biggest media spending is for its meat companies. Their 1988 ad support rose 29% to $29.6 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Total measured media rose 20.6% to $15.9 million at Sara Lee Bakery. Sara Lee has a 30% U.S. market share of frozen baked goods followed by Mrs. Smith brands at 15% and Kraft with 12%. In frozen breads and breakfast pastries, Sara Lee's share is even bigger, 37%, followed by Kraft at 31%.

Acquisitions helped Schering-Plough expand its presence in key consumer products markets and joint ventures set the stage for new product launches in its ethical and OTC drug operations.

In cosmetics, the Maybelline line continues to hold second place in the market to Noxell's Cover Girl cosmetics. New product introductions and increased promotional efforts helped improve Maybelline's market share from 19.5% to 20% in 1988 compared to 22% for Noxell's Cover Girl, according to Value Line Investment Survey analyst Rudolph C. Caryl.

While Maybelline's worldwide sales grew by 10%, its U.S. measured spending dropped 9.5% to $38 million. Maybelline put $8 million behind the launch of Color Soft Lips and Color Tough Nails, part of the cosmetic's Shine Free line targeted at young women.

The largest-selling Maybelline line, Great Lash mascara, remained the leader and drew $14 million in measured media expenditures, up 17%.

This July, S-P sold to Unilever its European cosmetic companies, Rimmel and Chicogo, which had combined sales of about $75 million in 1988. S-P's North America cosmetics company, Maybelline, had 1988 sales of $280 million.

S-P's personal care group, which includes U.S. sun-care and foot-care products and proprietary medicines, introduced premium-priced Spectra tanning products to broaden its sun-care line. In its first year on the market, Coppertone Water Babies line of sun protection products for children grabbed 43% of the children's segment, a share twice that of the closest competitor.

Coppertone received $4 million in measured media support, down 20%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Dr. Scholl drew $11 million in measured spending, a hike of 196% attributed to support for Back Guard full-shoe inserts. Specialty shoe inserts are the growth segment of the foot care market, according to S-P.

Drixoral cold medication got a 101% increase in measured media to $13 million but its share of the highly-competitive $700 million cold medications market remained at 7%. Drixoral is fifth, behind leader Procter & Gamble's Nyquil at 12%, Miles' Alka-Seltzer at 10% and BurroughsWellcome's combined 9% share for Actifed and Sudafed.

Last September, S-P purchased Palo Alto, Calif.-based Cooper Cos.' domestic contact lens solutions line, and later obtained rights in the U.S. and Japan to Cooper's Aquaflex line of soft contact lenses.

S-P formed two joint ventures to develop and market products, including one with Marion Laboratories for an OTC version of Marion's anti-ulcer drug, Carafate and another with Sandoz Pharmaceuticals for GM-CSF, a natural protein that plays an important role in the production of white blood cells.

The Cooper lines were merged with the Wesley-Jessen vision care business. Big spending in the divisions remained Dura-Soft contact lenses, which received $8.1 million in measured spending, down 5%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

S-P moved all its Ogilvy & Mather business after the two came at odds over S-P's refusal to provide O&M with more substantiation for Fibre Trim ad claims. Fibre Trim went in-house. Ocu-Clear and Chlor-Trimeton, totaling $20 million in billings, went to Ketchum Advertising, New York and Drixoral to Messner Vetere Berger Carey Schmetterer, New York.

Seagram Co. is seeking to become a premium beverage company, not just a distilled spirits marketer, by focusing on promoting its premium beverage brands, acquiring others (including non-alcohol brands) and divesting marginal lines.

Following last year's acquisitions of Tropicana for $1.2 billion and Martell Cognac for $372 million, Seagram assumed the marketing and distribution rights this year to Wyborowa Vodka of Poland, as well as other Polish vodkas.

The company through its U.S. marketing arm, Jos. E. Seagram & Sons, plans to re-enter the growing $450 million vodka category at the beginning of 1990 with the premium product. It will compete against category leader Absolut, from Carillon Importers and No. 2 Monsieur Henri Wines' Stolichnaya import. While Seagram discontinued its Seagram's Imported Vodka, imported vodka sales industrywide grew by 20% in 1988, at the same time the total liquor market continued its decline, down 3.3% in the U.S. last year.

In March 1989, Seagram acquired for $15 million American Natural Beverage Corp., makers of Soho Natural Sodas, sparkling soft drinks.

Tropicana, spending $20 million in measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron, launched its "Great Tastes of Tropicana" aimed at broadening the consumption of juice from summer to year-round. The company also put $8 million behind its roll-out of fruit juice-based "Twisters" beverage, sold in supermarkets.

Pure Premium chilled ready-to-serve orange juice remains Tropicana's top seller, leading the category with a 26.8% share to Coca-Cola Minute Maid's 17.7% and 9.8% for Procter & Gamble's Citrus Hill. The frozen and ready-to-serve orange juice received over $25 million in measured media expenditures.

Seagram this January also paid Brown-Forman Corp. $36 million for the U.S. marketing rights to Martell cognac. DDB Needham Worldwide, New York, won the worldwide $25 million-to-$30 million Martell account. Martell is the world's second largest-selling cognac with 18% of the 93 million-case global market, according to London-based Impact International. Hennessey leads with 24%.

Seagram sold 17 of its non-core distilled spirits brands in March to two companies, Sazerac Co., New Orleans, former importer of Wyborowa vodka and Heaven Hill Distilleries Inc., Bardstown, Ky. The largest-selling brands sold were Crown Russe Vodka, Nikolai Vodka and Burnett's Gin. The departing brands accounted for about half of Seagram's brands in the U.S., but contributed only 8% of unit sales and 4% of operating profits.

Seagram's 7 Crown, once the largest-selling liquor in the U.S., was third last year at 4.65 million cases, behind Bacardi Rum and second-ranked Smirnoff Vodka, according to Impact It remained Seagram's biggest seller, amassing a 2.7% share of total market, up from 2.6% in the prior year. 7 Crown and Seagram's Gin each received about $4.5 million in measured media. Spending on Seagram's VO dropped from that level in 1987 to $2.5 million.

Coolers continued to evade consumer interest, although Seagram Cooler led the category with a 33.5% share. The Seagram cooler line received $28 million measured support. Seagrams and E&J Gallo (Bartles & Jaymes) command two-thirds of the cooler market.

Edgar Bronfman Jr., 33, was named president of Seagram, succeeding David G. Sacks who became vice-chairman. The Bronfman family holds a 38.5% interest in publicly-held Seagram.

Responding to mounting investor pressure to improve its sagging profits, Sears, Roebuck & Co. has undertaken a series of dramatic changes.

The nation's largest retailer in late October 1988 launched a major restructuring that shook up its entire organization, aimed at cutting costs, centralizing operations and revitalizing its sprawling Merchandise Group.

The overhaul demanded that the company put its headquarters Sears Tower up for sale while it sought a cheaper, suburban location for its Merchandise Group; that it pare personnel by closing numerous field offices and sell its Coldwell Banker Commercial Real Estate Group.

But the most radical change was Sears' company-wide switch to a new "every-day low price" merchandising strategy on March 1, 1989, which ended its decades-old policy of holding weekly sales on certain merchandise.

To introduce the new policy, Sears staged a huge, national "grand re-opening" of its stores, which was supported by a series of network TV spots via Ogilvy & Mather, Chicago. The network TV-and-print ad push in March was the biggest in its history, continuing the theme O&M created in 1988: "Your money's worth and a whole lot more."

The move to "every-day low pricing" mirrored the strategies of rivals K mart and Wal-Mart, which—along with discounters—have undercut Sears' profits in recent years. Its new strategy also includes a new emphasis on national brand-name merchandise, led by the national rollout of Sears' new Brand Central electronics and appliance superstore departments inside its stores.

In addition to Brand Central, Sears has added more "power formats" carrying national brands alongside its own private label brands in departments including hardware, lawn & garden, apparel and automotive supplies.

Sears opened a downsized version of its larger department stores, called Sears Ltd., in Chicago this year.

The company also stepped up its network TV advertising in 1989 and increased its sweepstakes and promotions, by holding a lottery-style sweepstakes promotion tied to its customers' SearsCharge numbers; in September it launched its first-ever network TV tie-in promotion with NBC.

Behind the scenes, Sears slashed costs by centralizing advertising at its headquarters, and closing dozens of field offices. Its cost-cutting plan also called for a major shift in its newspaper ad contracts, which it set in motion by gaining a single ad rate from Gannett Co., the nation's largest newspaper chain.

Sears' retail operations accounted for $282.6 million in measured media in 1988, a slight increase of 2.2% despite a sizable drop of 8.9% to about $155 million for its major ad medium, national newspapers, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Sears' Allstate Insurance was profitable again in 1988 and extremely active in advertising, spending $50.3 million in measured advertising, up 74%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

In 1989 it broke more emotionally appealing new TV spots for its life insurance, via Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, which has handled its account for over 30 years.

Dean Witter Financial Services Group said its Discover credit card was solidly profitable in 1988, although earnings from its retail brokerage operations were down due to economic shifts. Discover continued to air network TV spots created in 1988 via DDB Needham, Chicago, themed: "It pays to discover." Measured spending on the card slipped 16.2% to $31.1 million in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron.

In May 1989, Dean Witter Reynolds broke the first advertising via new agency Leo Burnett USA, which won its $10 million account in 1988.

The brokerage aspect of the business drew $4.6 million in measured spending, down from $13.5 million in 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

SmithKline Beecham is now the third largest pharmaceutical company in the world following the merger in July 1989 of SmithKline Beckman Corp., Philadelphia, and Beecham Group PLC, London.

The combined company's annual revenues of $6.7 billion are surpassed only by Merck & Co. and Bristol-Myers Squibb, which will move into second place this October when its merger is finalized, producing a company with $8.6 billion in sales.

Prior to the merger, a change of ownership had been anticipated in the pharmaceutical industry for SmithKline after it generated only $55 million in operating profit in 1988 on sales of $3.22 billion, down 7%. Its future also was clouded because it had yet to find a drug to match the sales of Tagamet, that recently lost its rating as the world's best-selling anti-ulcer drug to Glaxo PLC's Zantac. Tagamet's patent protection also expires in 1992 in Europe and in 1994 in the U.S.

The company had begun restructuring —eliminating more than 1,600 jobs in 1988—long before talks of a merger surfaced. It had spun off its Beckman Instruments division, while offering 16% of the stock to the public.

Beecham had ended 1988 more positively, earning $69 million on $3.5 billion in sales, up 14.3%. In recent years, a strong marketing focus has yielded sales gains in the U.S. for its Amoxil, Augmentin and Timentin antibiotics as well as Tums, Sucrets, Geritol and Aqua-Fresh toothpaste. In August 1988, Beecham sold off its trouble-plagued Beecham cosmetics unit, based in Chicago, for approximately $91.5 million.

The new company will be headquartered in London, with Robert Bauman, former Beecham executive chairman, serving as chief executive of the combined companies. SmithKline's former Chairman-CEO Henry Wendt will serve as chairman, based in Philadelphia.

Analysts predict the synergy between the two companies can produce cost savings. A joint sales force of 1,900 in the U.S. alone should achieve greater sales for SmithKline Beecham ethical drugs since the market shows that doctors are more likely to prescribe a company's drugs when in regular contact with the company.

The same sales force will be able to tap the U.S. market for Beecham's antibiotics beyond their main distribution base of the U.K. and Europe.

As part of the transaction, SmithKline spun off Allergan Inc., an eyecare subsidiary based in Irvine, Calif., to shareholders. The company also sold its remaining 84% stake in Beckman Instruments to its shareholders. Beecham agreed to sell off its U.K. and European cosmetics businesses, Yardley, Margaret Astor and Lancaster, which last year had sales of roughly $700 million.

The remainder of 1989 will be devoted to the internal meshing of the company's operations. It is anticipated that SmithKline's OTC brands, which have annual sales of about $200 million, would be consolidated with Pittsburgh-based Beecham Consumer Products. A company spokesman said Philadelphia will likely remain headquarters for the pharmaceutical business, as well as serving as SmithKline Beecham's U.S. base.

Brands likely to be consolidated with Beecham Consumer Products include Contac and Ecotrin. Contac, the fifth-largest selling U.S. cold remedy, was promoted with $13 million in measured media spending in 1988, according to LNA/Arbitron.

There were few agency conflicts as a result of the merger. BBDO, which has the $15 million Contac account, could possibly be odd man out since it handles only one brand for the new OTC conglomerate. Beecham and SmithKline both use Jordan, McGrath, Case & Taylor for OTC advertising.

Earlier in 1989 Beecham completed the consolidation of Norcliff-Thayer brands, including Tums, Oxy, Orafix and Liquiprin, acquired in 1985, into Beecham Consumer Products. This brings two category leaders under the Beecham banner—Tums antacid tablets with 27% market share and Oxy acne medication brands, No. 1, ahead of Sterling Drug's Stri-Dex pads and Clearasil. Line extensions include a new Tums E-X Antacid, which was supported with $4.8 million in measured spending in 1988, and a Tums Liquid Antacid at $5.5 million, according to LNA/Arbitron.

Massengill feminine hygiene products were extended with the rollout of Massengill soft cloth towelettes, which were supported with $4 million in measured media. N'Ice sugarless cold lozenges, including N'Ice cold spray and N'Ice Children's Lozenges, got new formulations.

Beecham in 1985 pioneered the idea of a children's formulation for toothpaste with Aqua-Fresh. That launch has helped boost Beecham to more than 11% of the $1.2 billion dentifrice category. Overall brand spending for Aqua-Fresh rose 32% over 1987 levels, in part because of a $13.3 million spending push for the rollout of its tartar control toothpaste. The toothpaste is SmithKline Beecham's largest-selling consumer brand worldwide.

The advertising for several tartar control toothpastes drew fire from the Food & Drug Administration for their claims. Ironically, the FDA warning is at odds with standards established by the American Dental Association's Council on Dental Therapeutics, which grants the ADA's seal of acceptance. Toothpastes such as Aqua-Fresh, which carry the seal, would lose such approval if they complied with FDA requests.

During 1988, Beecham ended its U.S. cosmetics venture by selling its Beecham Cosmetics business back to a management group and Banker's Trust Co.

Sony Corp.'s big move last year was the purchase of CBS Records, giving it worldwide rights to labels like Epic, CBS Masterworks and Columbia among others, and the related Columbia House marketing arm.

Despite Sony's increased and highly visible spending on consumer electronics products and its growing step into feature films, CBS Records, and more specifically Columbia House, generates the majority of Sony's U.S. ad spending.

Columbia House uses direct response marketing through magazines, FSIs, TV and direct mail to sell records, CDs and videos under a variety of clubs. That marketing has changed little since Sony's purchase of CBS Records from CBS Inc.

CBS and Columbia brands, from clubs to compact discs, spent $53.2 million in measured media, up 10.4% from 1987, according to LNA/Arbitron.

In one of the bigger media shifts in the past year, the CBS Video Club switched from using both TV and print to virtually all TV. Wunderman Worldwide, New York, handles Columbia House media advertising, while Columbia House uses in-house staff for direct mail.

CBS Records, which is the second largest record seller in the U.S. (behind Time Warner's WEA), has seen its market share of top albums decline sharply in the past year. Billboard magazine recently reported that in the first half of this year CBS Records' share dropped to 14.2% from 18.2% in the same period of 1988 for popular albums, to 12.4% from 18.2% for black albums and to 19.3% from 19.7% for country.

CBS Records has responded by seeking more alternative artists and turning to more niche market segments and less general circulation advertising, though market plans vary considerably by group. Advertising also has turned away from the hard sell. While CDs, records and cassettes remain CBS Records' mainstay, sales of music videos are growing.

Another Sony Corp. unit, SVS Corp. (formerly Sony Video Software) is growing, though still a small player in films. In a move that may offer a vision of its parent's future, SVS has expanded production of its own films. SVS originally distributed film videos and also bought theater rights to some. There are rumors Sony is looking to buy a major film studio.

Now that it is increasingly entering the movie production business, Sony is upgrading the marketing budget for its films, which previously were advertised regionally. SVS expects to have at least six films out in the next year and to launch its first national advertising. Among the films: "An Unremarkable Life," starring Patricia Neal and Shelley Winters, and "Best of the Best" starring Eric Roberts and James L. Jones. SVS continues to distribute videos, some through an agreement with Showtime.

Sony Corp. of America, once Sony's only U.S. subsidiary, spent the past year marketing and expanding existing lines rather than introducing new ones. The only exceptions were the introduction of the TR-5, a tiny, hand-sized video camera, and the launch of a single-frame electronic camera called Mavica.

The lull in new technology will not last long. Sony is readying major new audio products and may enter the home office market within months. It also reportedly hasn't ruled out getting into the cellular phone business.

Sony has upped its ad budget 20%, done some major alteration of its advertising and also shuffled its agency lineup. In the new lineup, Sony no longer splits products with one agency handling TV and another print. McCann-Erickson, New York, which at one point handled almost all Sony Corp. of America products, remains a Sony agency but early this month lost agency of record designation to Geer, DuBois, New York. It also lost Trinitron and other video products to Slater Hanft Martin, New York. McCann, however, still handles Sony's biggest single campaign for the HandyCam products and also handles Sony videotapes.

SHM now has most Sony consumer electronics products except for My First Sony, Mavica and Sony's Sports Video, all handled by Burkhardt & Christy, New York. Geer, DuBois, which is taking over media buying, continues to handle Sony's broadcast professional products.

Sony's new creative, debuting this fall, returns to a more light-hearted approach that was a hallmark of Sony's early campaigns.

Sony will support most heavily its TV line, a new audio product, its camcorders, and its line of Personal Videos that include a recorder player and a TV in a tape recorder-sized package. To bolster sales of the compact Personal Videos which use 8mm tapes rather than the normal larger VHS, Sony in August joined with Musicland to promote movies on 8mm in some locations.

Sony TVs last year were the third best-selling brand with 6.5% of U.S. TV sales, up from 6.0% in 1987, according to Television Digest. Sony's share of the VCR market was 2.0%, down from 2.5%. Sony has expanded its move from the Beta VCRs it developed to the industry-standard VHS system.

Like a pair of its sturdy jeans fresh from the wash, Levi Strauss & Co. is wearing well in the apparel marketplace.

Buoyed by the spectacular success of its Dockers line, Levi Strauss is transforming itself into a casual fashion house instead of simply a jeans manufacturer.

Dockers, introduced just three years ago, is a collection of casual pants intended for aging baby boomers. Larger around the middle, they are designed a notch above jeans in dressiness.

Levi's plans expansion of Dockers into sportswear for men, women and children. Dockers will grow to include shorts, shirts and outerwear. The push is expected to elevate Dockers sales to over $500 million in 1989, up dramatically from $118 million in 1988.

The Dockers experience is a far cry from Levi's previous attempts to offset slowing jeans sales. Jeans sales peaked in the U.S. in 1981 at 516 million pairs but dropped by almost 25% to 396 million pairs by 1988, researchers said.

Levi's at first tried to spur sales by creating its Battery Street Enterprises unit which included partnerships with designers like Perry Ellis. The mix was too far afield from jeans and, as a result, the Haas family, descendants of the immigrant who sold canvas pants, took the company private through a leveraged buyout.

President Bob Haas said he wanted to do what needed to be done without the glaring eye of Wall Street over his shoulder. He appears to have succeeded. "This time, [Levi's] kept within the boundaries of what it does best, and what the customer knows best," said Colton Bernard, a San Francisco retail consultant.

Levi's and VF each hold about a quarter of the jeans market. VF added to its Lee brand Wrangler and Rustler jeans with the 1986 buyout of Blue Bell Holdings. Smaller companies share the remainder of the market.

Levi's embarked on an internal cost cutting program, closing factories and reducing staff while at the same time boosting its ad campaign. Its Levi's 501 blues campaign ran for five years using blues music to sell the popular jeans with the buttonfly.

Although 501 sales doubled during the five years of the campaign, sales began to slip last year to 37 million pairs from 41 million in 1987. This year, Levi's altered the 501 blues campaign to use a personal, unscripted, stream of consciousness dialogue instead of music.

The new Levi's 501 spots are part of a $22 million campaign. Spending for Dockers is estimated at $5 million to $10 million, while the 900 Series women's line is backed with $20 million.

After two straight years of heavy losses in the U.S. car market, Subaru of America may be heading for a third.

In spite of innovative new entries this year, Subaru, the U.S. importer and distributor of cars made by Fuji Heavy Industries in Japan, recorded a loss its first six months of the new year as Subaru car sales remained flat at 87,088.

Total unit sales for Subaru in the U.S. were down again in 1988, dropping 11.9% to 155,954 vehicles, after a less severe 3.3% decline in 1987. Subaru's shares of the U.S. import market and total U.S. car market also were down, at 5.0% and 1.4%, respectively.

Costly rebate and incentive merchandising programs to reduce massive inventories of unsold vehicles cost the company nearly $100 million in 1987 alone. Continuation of the programs accounted for comparable expenditures last year, contributing to the losses of fiscal 1988. Incentives ran from $1,000 to $3,000 on various models. They were used basically to clear out older models. Subaru, however, expects to eliminate this merchandising expense with the launch of new and more competitive products.

In 1988, Subaru station wagons were the company's best-seller again, with sales of 65,725 units, followed by the four-door sedans at 34,397. The entry-level Justy, priced at $5,866 for the four-speed model, was the third best seller at 27,313 units, followed by the upscale XT and XT6 sports models, priced in the $13,000 to $17,000 range, at 14,077 units. All categories were down from year earlier levels.

The Justy minicar accounted for the largest share of Subaru measured advertising in 1988, with an estimated $18 million, mostly in network and spot TV. LNA/Arbitron figures put overall advertising for Subaru passenger cars at $30 million, while expenditures for Subaru station wagons, as a separate category, were over $12 million.

Spring 1989 saw the launch of the new Legacy models, Subaru's first line of compact wagons and sedans, the largest and most expensive ($12,500 to $18,000) cars it has offered. Featuring styling that closely resembles Honda's Acura Legend, the Legacy was expected to give Subaru dealers a strong competitor for the Toyota Camry, Mazda 626, Honda Accord and Nissan Sentra, and help lead the company's comeback in the U.S. market. Thus far sales of the Legacy, the only Subaru without incentives, have been lower than expected.

Subaru hopes to sell 60,000 to 80,000 Legacy models for the full 1990 calendar year—about half of expected total annual sales of 150,000 to 160,000 units.

The Legacy got the lion's share of an estimated $60 million media budget for the second and third quarters of 1989. Subaru spent $40 million in those two quarters in 1988.

During the 1989 tax season, the Subaru rebate program also made use of tax man Henry Bloch of H&R Block, to get out the word on rebates. The TV spots, which broke in February, intentionally looked like the commercials Mr. Bloch did for years for his own company.

Subaru's many sports promotion tie-ins include its use as official car of the U.S. Cycling Federation and sponsorship of a series of seven bicycle races around the country. The company's primary sports sponsorship has been as official car of the U.S. Ski Team, an involvement dating back to 1976.

Tandy Corp. plans to aggressively pursue the high end of the personal computer market. It has realigned computer marketing operations, giving its GRiD Systems Corp. division sole responsibility for pursuing large corporate and government accounts for both GRiD and Tandy computer products.

Tandy last year acquired GRiD, a respected high-performance laptop computer marketer. The association with GRiD gives Tandy the respect it deserves, but seldom received when it pursued these plum accounts through its Radio Shack

Computer Centers, analysts say.

The marketing realignment will "significantly" boost ad spending for fiscal 1990 beginning July 1 for Tandy's GRiD division, said Bob Goligoski, GRiD's manager of marketing communications. Uhlan-Wright, Mountain View, Calif., handles GRiD's creative. Media placement is done in-house.

Tandy's 7,000 Radio Shack stores and computer centers, meanwhile, will continue to focus on selling to the home, school and small-to-medium-sized business markets.

Ad spending should stay about the same for Radio Shack stores and Tandy computer products, said Bernard Appel, Radio Shack's president. Advertising is handled in-house by the Radio Shack Advertising Department.

Neither Tandy nor GRiD would disclose its ad spending. But, Tandy Corp.'s annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1988, put ad spending at 7.1% of sales and operating revenues or $268 million worldwide.

Tandy's stature in the business computer market also should be enhanced now that it has reached marketing agreements with Digital Equipment Corp. and Matsushita Electric's Panasonic division, which will both sell Tandy computers under their own labels.

Tandy also is looking at alternative distribution channels for the mass market—the first time it has looked outside of its base of Radio Shack stores. It is testing the sale of Tandy 1,000 SX personal computer in 50 Wal-Mart Stores. Also, it has teamed up with J.C. Penney Co. and American Express to sell personal computers through direct mail.

But personal computers are not Tandy/Radio Shack's only business. Radio Shack wants to be known as "The Technology Store."

The company continues to give its stores a high-tech look. A renovation program is expected to be complete in 1992.

The company also is working at developing other leading-edge technology products in audio, video, telephone and magnetic media. Its Thor-CD, an erasable compact disc, is due out in mid-to-late 1990, and Tandy hopes to participate in the development of high-definition TV technology.

Tandy is parent of McDuff Electronics and SuperCenters, Video-Concepts, Scott Electronics and Memtek Products, which markets Memorex audiotapes.

Texas Air is emerging from a strike at its Eastern Air Lines operating subsidiary that may determine whether the Houston-based holding company enters the 1990s with a smooth landing.

Chairman Frank Lorenzo is attempting to sell off pieces of the company in an effort to keep Texas Air's Eastern subsidiary from being grounded. He also needs cash to reduce $2.5 billion in debt at Continental Airlines, Texas Air's other main unit.

In 1988 alone, Texas Air brought in $1.2 billion from the sale of assets and securities, and from the sale and leaseback of aircraft. Then in early 1989, deals fell through to sell off Eastern entirely to a group led by Peter Ueberroth and Eastern employees, and to sell Eastern's South American routes to American Airlines. However, Texas Air sold off the profitable Eastern Shuttle in June 1989 to developer Donald J. Trump for $365 million. Approvals from bankruptcy court and federal agencies also were expected this month for Eastern's $210 million sale to Midway Airlines of eight Philadelphia gates, 16 aircraft and air routes to Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. Lorenzo has been involved in talks concerning the sale of a major stake in Continental to Mr. Trump, or to Scandinavian Airlines System and another unidentified partner. SAS already owns 9.9% of Texas Air as part of a joint marketing agreement.

Aggressive fare-cutting and promotional tactics by Continental and Eastern, have earned them reputations as cut-throat competitors. This has dictated the selection of daily newspapers as the main outlet for fare-oriented advertising in 1988.

Eastern and Continental combined equally for measured newspaper spending of $82 million in 1988, up 24%, according to LNA/Arbitron.

However, Texas Air's ability to compete in 1989 was severely tested by labor conflicts at Eastern, where a strike in April forced the carrier into bankruptcy. Although crippled, Eastern did not shut down, maintaining shuttle operations, reduced service from Atlanta, New York, Washington and Miami, and full service to 20 cities in Latin America.

As Eastern rebuilds with non-union employees, it is supporting its operations with print and spot radio advertising, and image-oriented spot TV in New York, Miami and Washington, says Michael Henderson, Eastern's director of marketing communications.

By early September, Eastern had resumed flights to 57 cities with just under 600 departures per day. The carrier's goal is to down-size from its pre-strike service levels of 77 cities and 1,000 flights per day to 70 cities with 750 to 800 departures per day.

Troubles at Eastern have dropped Texas Air's combined operations from the No. 1 air carrier at mid-year 1988 with an 18.6% share to No. 5 at mid-year 1989 with a 12.5% share of revenue passenger miles (RPM).

The two heavily advertised halves of Time Warner Inc.—Time's magazine group and Warner's filmed entertainment division—were extremely active in 1988. Warner charted an 11% market share of theatrical film rentals and Time expanded its battery of magazines with startups and acquisitions.

The combined company debuted in July after Time Inc. fended off a hostile takeover attempt by Paramount Communications that threatened to undo its deal with Warner. For 1988 and 1987 financial and advertising results shown in the accompanying table and box, Advertising Age combined totals for both companies.

Time, which underwent an editorial revamping in 1988, recorded ad revenue of $349.7 million on 2,505 pages, up 6% over 1987, according to Publisher's Information Bureau. The magazine's guaranteed rate base was lowered 6.5% to 4.3 million as of Jan. 1.

This coming February, Entertainment Weekly will enter the market. The magazine, featuring reviews of TV videos, books and other forms of entertainment, is expected to reach circulation of 500,000.

Sports Illustrated for Kids monthly debuted in January. About the same time, Time launched Cooking Light, a bimonthly published by its Southern Progress subsidiary. The publication, perhaps more a lifestyle than cooking magazine, was expected to carry 320 pages of advertising this year. Southern Progress also acquired Southern magazine from Southern Limited Partnership and investment bank Stephens Inc. and renamed it Southpoint, aiming for greater male readership.

Time acquired a 50% interest ($185 million) in Whittle Communications and holds a $1.5 million minority investment in Emerge Communications which this fall has launched the first issue of Emerge, a general interest publication written for a black audience.

In December, Time and Hachette-Filipacchi jointly published a "one-shot issue" of English-language Match, a European picture magazine, which may become a pan-European five-language monthly. Time and Hachette are launching Elle Japon, a Japanese version of the popular fashion magazine and a Spanish edition of Fortune this month, with a German edition planned for next year.

Time also sold out to joint venture partner, Dale Lang, its 50% share in Working Woman/McCall's Group.

Time's magazine group increased its subscription promotion for Sports Illustrated by 61% to $18.6 million in measured media, according to LNA/Arbitron, cut spending slightly for Time at $15 million, and decreased expenditures for People by 32% to $13.3 million.

Warner's summer 1989 was a blockbuster with the release of "Batman" and "Lethal Weapon 2." In 1988, Warner Bros. stayed in the third position in North American theatrical film rental market shares, according to Variety The studio had 11% of the market, the same as Twentieth Century Fox, but trailed Disney (20%) and Paramount (16%). Warner Bros. spent $74 million in measured spending on 26 films in 1988.

In fall 1988, Warner Bros. formed a joint venture with David Puttnam, former head of Columbia Pictures, to produce six films over four years.

This January the $1.3 billion Warner buyout of Lorimar Telepictures was finalized, forming a studio with 47 hours of weekly TV programming and 31 series of both first-run and syndicated programs.

Time-owned Home Box Office announced plans to enter the basic cable industry with a 24-hour, all-comedy channel later this year. Time decreased its spending on HBO 23% to $12.4 million in 1988. Spending for Cinemax rose by almost 400% to $4.3 million.

HBO's entry into basic will fit well into Warner's cable operation. Warner ranks as fifth-largest MSO.

Toyota Motor Sales USA, a subsidiary of Toyota Motor Corp., Japan, anticipates an overall 25% to 30% ad spending gain in 1989, largely to launch the Lexus luxury car this month. That comes on top of an 18% gain in ad spending in 1988, which nurtures Toyota's position as the leading car/truck importer in the U.S.

Lexus will draw more than $60 million in advertising this year and next as it enters the highly contested luxury import market now dominated by European producers and American Honda's Acura division. Nissan also is joining the fray this fall with its Infiniti line.

Toyota expects to sell 16,000 Lexuses by the end of 1989 and 75,000 next year, evenly split between the high-end LS400 at $35,000 to $40,000 and the smaller ES250, which starts at $21,050. Presales of the imported Lexus amounted to a sizable 5,000.

Toyota has signed 90 Lexus dealers in the top luxury car markets, with plans for 100 by 1990. About 60% of them currently run Toyota dealerships.

The company sold a total of 935,960 units (cars/trucks) in the U.S. during 1988, up 0.3%. Despite its sales increase, market share dipped to 6.05% from 6.27%, still a sizable lead over No. 2 importer, American Honda at 4.97%. Toyota led importers in the light-truck market, with a 5.1% share, down from 6.5%. Nissan remained No. 2 at 3.5%, down from 4.6%.

The intensive pre-launch Lexus marketing plans almost went into a tailspin over the use of the Lexus name. Toyota had spent an estimated $12 million promoting Lexus when Mead Corp., owner of the Lexis computerized information service for attorneys, sued it for trademark infringement. Toyota won the case on an appeal.

The first consumer ads for Lexus broke this January. Initial ads showed only small portions of its two new cars, such as a close-up of a fender. In the spring and early summer, Lexus hit the auto buff books with ads highlighting its technology and design. An eight-page brochure was available to those calling an 800 number.

Toyota boosted its measured advertising by 18.3% to $191 million in 1988. According to LNA/Arbitron, it spent $10.8 million on best-selling Cressida (about $21,498 for a four-door sedan), which had 213,365 unit sales, up 14.3%.

Camry, the best-seller in 1987, accounted for $30.5 million, followed by Corolla at $20 million and Celica at $10.7 million. Spot and network TV received the lion's share of ad expenditures, but were heavily supported by magazines.

Much of the 1989 ad effort focused on Toyota's line of redesigned light trucks, with the creative approach blending in with car ads to bolster the overall Toyota "brand" image. LNA/Arbitron measured media figures estimate 1988 truck spending at $57 million, up 35.7%. With its 1988 truck sales down 18% from the previous year, Toyota went into 1989 with a truck budget said to be double that of 1988.

The Toyota and General Motors Corp. agreed to produce 100,000 light trucks a year beginning in 1991 at their joint production facility in Fremont, Calif. The deal will enable Toyota to skirt a 25% U.S. Customs tariff on some imported trucks.

Toyota joined the "real people" trend in import car advertising with a 12-minute video brochure on Cressida. The tape, mailed to all current Cressida owners and selected others, invited them to test-drive the car and pick up a free videocassette of one of 10 popular movies.

UAL Corp., innovative in its integration of travel and leisure operations through its Allegis era, may set the tone of future management-labor relations under its new employee-ownership structure.

In an agreement reached late this month, UAL will be sold to its employees via its pilots union, top executives and British Airways PLC for $6.75 billion. Employees will hold 75% of the shares, management 10%, and BA 15%.

The board structure requires that major directional changes affecting the company cannot be approved by a simple majority but must receive a majority of both the labor and independent contingents on the board. Employees cast the deciding vote should the board reach a standstill.

This structure perhaps would have nipped UAL's past integration of hotels, rental cars and airlines under first the UAL and then the Allegis banner—a concept that did not draw the employees' support.

United's continued strength in American aviation and its successful targeting of the more profitable business traveler is the envy of the industry. In 1988, United reported its passenger load factor rose to 67.9% from 65.4% in 1987 and its average yield per revenue passenger mile rose from 10.3 cents to 11.2 cents. While cost per seat mile also rose from 7.9 cents to 8.2 cents, that still meant United was making more money per passenger per mile. UAL Corp. for the first time in four years reported a profit from continuing operations.

United has geared its operations to meet its primary marketing targeting—the businessman. It now offers hourly service between Chicago, Washington, Denver and Seattle hubs, an extensive frequent flyer program and a marketing cooperation program with British Airways. It also has an award-winning ad campaign from Leo Burnett USA, Chicago, featuring George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Many of those marketing programs were put into effect under John R. Zeeman, former United Airlines exec VP-marketing and planning. In May, Mr. Zeeman was named to head up UAL's partially-owned European reservations system, Galileo, and John C. Pope, United's CFO, was named his replacement. Mr. Pope has so far offered little indication of any plans to change marketing directions.

United, however, has said it will talk to other agencies beyond Burnett, its sole agency, in planning for European expansion next year. The talks with other agencies are expected to be only about advertising in Europe.

United's success has not been achieved without some problems, including high load factors on existing routes, former head, Richard Ferris' abortive decision to put money into other industries instead of additional planes, and United's later decision to await arrival of suitably-equipped and more fuel-efficient new planes instead of buying used older models. These delayed the airline's entry into some competitive markets and left it unable to fill demand in others, especially in the Pacific.

United also lost the profitable Seattle-Tokyo route in March and has seen increased rivalry from American Airlines in the U.S., which now has more seats than United, and from Northwest Airlines for the overseas business traveler.

As a result, United's share of the total U.S. airline market dropped to 17.6% in revenue passenger miles during the first seven months of 1989, compared to 17.8% in the same period of 1988. This placed it No. 2 behind American, which had an 18.7% share, up from 16.2%.

United has added Mexican flights in the last year and announced plans to start European service in May. While United has authority to serve Frankfurt, it is seeking government permission to serve eight European cities from its hubs.

United Airlines is a much more dominant part of UAL Corp. than it has been in recent years. The parent, which changed its name from Allegis in May 1988, earlier sold its Westin Hotels and Hertz Rent-a-Car subsidiaries, and in August 1988, sold off 50% interest in Covia Partnership (the Apollo reservations system in the U.S. and Japan) to several airlines for $499 million.

Unilever continued to strengthen its position in the U.S. health and beauty aids market through acquisition.

The largest came this July with the acquisition of Faberge and Elizabeth Arden lines of toiletries, cosmetics and fragrances. Unilever paid the Riklis Family Corp. $1.55 billion for the properties.

Faberge gives Unilever a strong line of hair-care products, including category leader Aqua Net hairspray, as well as Faberge Organic and Brut deodorant and fragrances. Elizabeth Arden markets premium skin-care, fragrance and color cosmetics products under Elizabeth Arden, Chloe, Lagerfeld and Fendi brand names.

The two companies will be added to Unilever's Chesebrough-Pond's unit. They carry a combined $42 million ad budget.

This summer, Chesebrough-Pond's also acquired Minnetonka Corp. and its Calvin Klein Cosmetics line after picking up Evyan Perfumes earlier in the year. Evyan is a New York-based company that markets White Shoulders, The Baron and Most Precious fragrances. The ad account went to Ogilvy & Mather which also will handle new introductions from Chesebrough's Matchabelli unit, including Elizabeth Taylor's Passion for Men, and the first fragrance for Erno Laszlo, both scheduled for launch this fall.

Unilever created Van Den Bergh Foods Co., New York, from parts of Lever Bros. and Shedd's Food Products, as well as portions of recent acquisitions, Durkee Industrial Foods and Pennant Products. The move consolidates Unilever U.S.'s strong presence in edible fats and oils.

Last winter, Unilever's Thomas J. Lipton Inc. and Lever Brothers created L&L Media, New York, a media buying operation to handle the $150 million national broadcast ad budget for the two concerns. L&L should give "more flexibility in pairing up products in commercial clusters, especially those that use split :30s," says Daria Sheehan, a Lever spokeswoman. Outside sources said the move was partly in reaction to the continued price hikes for national TV time, as well as surcharges for 15-second commercials.

Unilever showed mixed results in its main strength in 1988—household products. The company did well in the $1.5 billion liquid laundry detergent category, with Lever's Surf liquid, a line extension launched in 1986. Supported by increased advertising—more than $6.6 million for the liquid and almost $15 million shared with Surf powder in 1988 compared with $3.9 and $9.5 million, respectively, the year before—Surf liquid grabbed 10% of the liquid market, up from 6% to 7% the prior year. Lever's Wisk dropped about two points to 15% with its All liquid rose about a point to 6%. But Procter & Gamble still reigns with Tide, flat at 20%; Era, remaining at 10% and Cheer at 6%.

For all brands, Lever had a total share of 30% of liquids, against P&G's 45%, both essentially unchanged from a year ago, while Colgate-Palmolive had 8%, according to Jay Freedman, household products analyst for Kidder, Peabody & Co.

In the $2 billion dry laundry detergent category, Lever's Surf garnered a 10% share, up a point from the year before while its All rated 6%, down slightly. P&G dominated with Tide's 32%, Cheer's 9% and Bold's 5%.

For all dry laundry detergent brands, Lever's share stood flat at 17% for 1988, with P&G off about a point to 55%. Colgate-Palmolive had 12%.

In fabric softeners—liquid and dry combined—Lever's share fell to 23.5% from 28% in 1987. In the competitive dry fabric softener category—growing more than 8% to some $340 million in 1988—it appears P&G has won with the successful introduction of Downy sheets in early 1988, garnering 15% of the category compared to Lever's Snuggle sheets which dropped from 24% to 18%. P&G also markets Bounce dryer sheets, the category leader with 40%. The other major contender is Beecham's Cling Free, with 6%.

In the half-billion dollar dish detergent category, Lever's Sunlight had 18% of the market, up 1 share point. While its All also gained slightly to 4%. P&G's Cascade brand's 50% share remained flat. Colgate-Palmolive's Palmolive brand dropped 2% to 13%. Palmolive liquid was recently joined by other liquids which now comprise 25% of the dish detergent sales, including Lever's Sunlight liquid, with 6% and P&G's liquid Cascade, 9%.

Of the $1 billion bar soap category, Lever's Dove took a 15% share in 1988, flat from a year before while Lever's Caress was flat at 5%; Shield had 3% and Lifebouy and Lux each had less than 2%. Armour-Dial's Dial and P&G's Ivory were at 13% and 10% shares, respectively. For all brands, Lever took 30% of the market—about the same as in 1987—against P&G's nearly 35%, up slightly and Armour-Dial's steady 20%.

Last July, Unilever bought back the distribution rights to its Pears soap from Dep Corp. and will explore Pears extention into facial cleansers next year, with Ogilvy & Mather handling the account.

The three-quarters of a billion dollar toothpaste market grew by only $25 million in 1988, due mainly to increased price and value associated with tartar control toothpastes. Lever brands took 11% of the market, down slightly from the year before, with Aim, 5%, down a point; CloseUp, flat at 5% and Pepsodent, flat with under 1%. P&G's Crest dropped 3 points to 35%, with Colgate-Palmolive's Colgate toothpaste up two points to 28% and Beecham's Aquafresh with 10%.

Tartar control now represents 35% of the market, with Lever's Tartar Control Aim only 1% compared to Crest, 20%; Colgate, 10% and Aquafresh, 5%.

Among food categories, Lever dominates margarines with some 30% of the market, including Shedd's, 12%, flat; Promise, 6%, steady; Imperial, down a point to 6%; I-Can't-Believe-It's-Not-Butter, up a point to 4% and Krona and Mrs. Filberts at less than 1% each.

Unilever's Lipton had about half the U.S. tea bag market, flat from 1987, trailed by Tetley's 10% and around 37% of the instant tea category led by Nestea's 43%.

Dairy marketing programs are working despite today's cholesterol and calorie concerns. Even though dairy advertising totals for 1988 are down, what's left is doing the job, judging from higher per capita U.S. dairy consumption.

U.S. Department of Agriculture indicates U.S. per capita dairy product consumption up 7.2% to 582.2 lbs. in 1988 from 543.3 lbs. in 1980. That jump is only partially credited to the big federal donations of surplus cheese.

One Midwestern dairy marketer estimated that before the 1983 Dairy & Tobacco Adjustment Act, total U.S. dairy promotion spending was about $90 million a year. It's now $230 million annually.

The dairy act created the National Dairy Production and Research Board and authorized a 15-cents-per-hundred weight of fluid milk assessment to be used by various organizations for a national dairy promotion research and nutrition program.

Some of that allotment goes to private groups such as the half-century-old American Dairy Association, the marketing arm of the United Dairy Industry Association, Rosemont, Ill. The ADA has been losing national support programs to the NDPRB, which in 1987 took over all national cheese, butter and ice cream advertising.

Largest of all state dairy associations, the Wisconsin Milk Marketing Board, also broke from ADA in late 1987 largely because of differing marketing views. Other independent marketing promotion programs are carried on by dairy boards in Pennsylvania, Louisiana and Utah.

Increased milk production is credited with the rise in allocated dairy revenues coming from U.S. dairy farmers in 1988. The total was up about 1% to $210 million from $207.8 million in 1987, which had fallen from $208.3 million in 1986.

Recipient of the largest chunk of milk checkoff funds among the U.S. dairy associations was the NDPRB, which got $76.8 million, down less than 1% from 1987. Its total spending for 1988 climbed 7.2% to $68.7 million; 90% of that was spent in media.

Income for ADA's parent United Dairy Industries Association, now a federation of 19 state and regional dairy associations, dropped 3.7% in 1988 to $51.8 million. Media spending totaled $46 million, down 24.2%. The ADA spent more eclectically than NDPRB, going heavily for spot TV at $20.5 million, and spot radio at $9 million among a multimedia buy, while NDPRB spent 55% of its media on network TV.

Of the separate state groups, the highest ad spending was by the California Milk Advisory Board, which spent $18.2 million for its 1988 marketing promotion, off 3%. Biggest of its campaigns was "Milk does a body good," costing $11.6 million, the work of McCann-Erickson, San Francisco. It also was used with adaptations by Wisconsin and Oregon.

Biggest product category for the NDPRB in 1988 was cheese. The two big campaigns, "Cheese Riddle" and "Don't Forget the Cheese," cost $22.7 million.

For 1989-90, the Dairy Board has budgeted $63.4 million for all advertising with $58.3 million earmarked for media.

The ADA continues with its biggest ad effort on TV and radio for adult fluid milk, themed "Milk, America's Health Kick."

The need to produce a coordinated dairy promotion program to take fuller advantage of creativity, media clout and coordinated national strategy is often brought up by the varied dairy groups. That coordination may be coming through an ad hoc body initiated this year by newly named NDPRB CEO Cynthia Carson. The goal of that body, called the Dairy Industry Strategic Marketing Alliance, is to recommend by the end of this year an industry-wide dairy marketing direction plus long-term strategy.

Washington's ax-wielding budget-cutters continue to trim the federal government's ad spending.

The Defense Department, always the government's top advertiser, saw its budget rise 0.4% to $201.7 million in fiscal 1988. But in fiscal 1989, ending Sept. 30, 1990, it is expected to decline to $196.6 million. The Pentagon reversed its ad strategy in the past year by emphasizing individual service campaigns over an umbrella campaign.

The Pentagon will keep its joint military recruitment advertising at about 10% to 15% of the total defense ad budget, or about $27 million in fiscal 1988, up 25.6% from the previous year.

In 1986 defense ad policy-makers thought they could save millions in ad dollars by shifting more money into the umbrella campaign and away from the specific services, an unpopular idea with the individual branches of the armed forces.

In fiscal 1989, because Marine, Navy and Air Force budgets had sunk so low that the services had very little money to spend on TV or other media, $5 million was transferred from the $31 million joint ad budget to those other services.

In the 1990 budget now under consideration by Congress, more money was recommended to be diverted from the proposed joint program of $30.8 million to the other services, perhaps as much as $5 million for the Navy, $2 million for Air Force and $3 million for the Marines.

In May the joint campaign broke its first new creative in four years: "Opportunity is waiting for you" is the theme of ads by Grey Advertising, New York.

Recruiting has suffered slightly as the Pentagon's ad budget stayed static. Even though the government's recruiting target figures were lower for both men and women in fiscal 1988, the services barely met their goals and the Marines missed its re-enlistment target for career personnel. The quality of new recruits—judged by aptitude tests and high school degrees—did not improve. In the first half of fiscal 1989, ending March 31, the percentage of high school graduates who signed up for the armed forces was slightly down from the same period in 1988. However, all the services met their recruiting goals.

The Army's budget continues to drop. In 1988, it spent $95.6 million, down 5.9%, and is expected to spend $91.7 million this year. For 1990, Army has requested $100.4 million. Young & Rubicam, New York, handles.

The Navy's ad budget increased 30.2% to $19.4 million in fiscal 1988, and is expected to remain about the same in 1989. For 1990, the Navy requested a budget of $20.2 million. BBDO, New York, is the agency.

The Marines spent $17.7 million last year, an 11.5% decline. It anticipates a budget of $16.9 million this year, and requested $16.8 million for 1990. The Marine's contract with J. Walter Thompson USA, Atlanta, is up for review next year.

The Air Force also saw a decline in fiscal 1988 of 11.9% to $14.8 million. It anticipates the same spending for 1989, and requested $14.2 million for 1990. Bozell, New York, handles the Air Force and the National Guard.

Other major government spenders include the U.S. Postal Service, whose budget dropped 12% to $35.6 million last year. The postal service budget for fiscal 1988 is more than $40 million and is expected to be more than $45 million in 1990. The Postal Service has become a more aggressive marketer under the direction of Peter Eichorn, new assistant postmaster general for marketing and communications, and a former top marketing executive for Polaroid Corp. This year the Postal Service has its first major corporate tie-in, with MCA Home Video for release of the video "Land Before Time." The video cassette will promote the service's new dinosaur commemorative stamps. The Postal Service also is considering a sponsorship for the 1992 Olympics.

Despite Amtrak's ad spending decline of 16.5% to $24.2 million in 1988, the railroad enjoyed a banner year, with revenue increasing 17%. Revenue is up 15% so far this year, and ridership increased 9%. Amtrak continues its "All Aboard Amtrak" campaign via DDB Needham Worldwide, New York.

The U.S. Mint will be less of a major player in the next several years. It spent about $16 million last year, down 27%, and is expected to have an even smaller budget this year.

Public service advertising rose to $17.4 million, up 14%. The Advertising Council handled $4.1 million of the public service ads, up 13.6%. The Centers for Disease Control's $8 million AIDS awareness campaign continues with its "America Responds to AIDS" public service ads. The CDC in the coming year will consider paid advertising, following congressional approval last October of a $45 million paid and public service campaign. Congress has not, however, authorized funds for the paid campaign, and has shown little inclination to do so.

Volkswagen of America is hoping the introduction of a new sports car and an upscale midsized sedan will help prevent unit sales in 1989 from skidding for the fourth straight year.

The automaker sold 168,000 vehicles in 1988, a 12% drop. The company's share of the U.S. import market fell sharply for the second straight year, from 6.1% to 5.5%, and its share of the total U.S. market dipped from 1.9% to 1.6%.

One bright spot was a strong showing from the Fox, Volkswagen's low-end subcompact. After a poorer-than-expected performance in 1987, sales of the Fox totaled 56,932 vehicles, up 41.7%.

Volkswagen is pinning much of its hopes for a turnaround in 1989 on the Corrado, its first full-blooded sports car. The 140-mph Corrado, a 1990 supercharged model, debuted in September. Another new Volkswagen entry, the Passat, an upscale midsized sedan, will be introduced during first quarter 1990.

Volkswagen's 1989 lineup of cars was both expanded to include new models and refined with features such as anti-lock breaking systems, new interiors and sunroofs. It celebrated its 40th anniversary in the U.S. by introducing six midyear models that carry the exclusive Wolfsburg Edition badge—a Jetta GLS 16V, a four-door Jetta GL, a a four-door Fox GL, a four-door Golf GL, a Cabriolet and a seven-seat Vanagon GL.

The automaker recently pulled its ad campaign featuring stoic engineers in life-threatening, race-course settings. William Gegota, Volkswagen U.S. director of marketing, said the "German Engineering. The Volkswagen Way" theme line will continue, but the 1990 campaign will see greater emphasis on regionalization, on both association and individual dealer co-op programs and on radio ads.

Audi of America, a division of Volkswagen of America, is hoping that a federal investigation, which found that unintended acceleration in Audi automobiles resulted from drivers unknowingly stepping on the accelerator instead of the brake, will finally put the controversy to rest.

Audi, haunted by the bad publicity concerning the unintended acceleration controversy since 1986, saw total vehicle sales for 1988 drop 44% to 22,943 units. Total sales for the first six months of 1989 also are down 20% to 9,312 from the same period last year. Audi's share of the total U.S. import market fell sharply from 1.3% to 0.75% in 1988 as its measured ad spending edged up 7% to $30 million.

The introduction of two new models—the 1990 Coupe Quattro and the 1990 Audi V8 Quattro—is designed to help the company get back on track. Both models are being supported by a wide-scale, three-month fall print campaign running in national magazines and newspapers.

Audi also introduced 1989 versions of the Audi 80, 80 Quattro, Audi 90 and Audi 90 Quattro models, as well as refined versions of the 100/200 Series. Along with its vehicles, Audi offers the Audi Advantage, which features a three-year/50,000-mile, new-vehicle limited warranty, maintenance protection and a Guaranteed Resale Index that certifies trade-in value.

Warner-Lambert Co. stepped up its new product activity in 1988-89, with line extensions of such popular brands as Dentyne gum and Benadryl cold remedy, and new ethical drugs to reduce cholesterol.

The new prescription drugs place W-L squarely in battle with pharmaceutical leader Merck & Co., which markets the leading cholesterol-reducing agent, Mevacor. It also is about to run headlong into Merrell Dow in the $400 million worldwide market for smoking cessation remedies.

W-L signed an agreement in December 1988 with Elan Corp. of Ireland to market a prescription nicotine patch for smoking cessation, pitting it directly against Merrell Dow's Nicorette, which has been the only prescription remedy in the U.S. to help smokers quit tobacco.

W-L's worldwide advertising and promotional budget has been increasing for several years, and it says the 1989 budget is $950 million, up 8%.

Spending in U.S. measured media, however, increased only 2.9%, although the numbers show W-L is basically increasing support for key brands. Products backed by the heaviest spending in 1988 were the Benadryl line, with $29.1 million in spending, up 9%; Dentyne gum with $11.6 million, up 1.7%; Listerine with $23 million, up 23.9%; Listermint with $10.6 million, up 4%; Rolaids with $15.6 million, up 0.6% and $18.1 million for Trident Gum, down 10.8%.

W-L stepped up spending for Listerine as it joined other competitors in billing the mouthwash as a plaque and gingivitis preventative. The claim is under review by the Food and Drug Administration, which says plaque-fighting ability is a drug claim, and products bearing such a claim must be reviewed for approval from the agency.

Last year, all mouthwashes marketed to prevent plaque increased their market share in food stores, valued at $363 million, or half the market. Listerine grew 7 share points to 26%, followed by Procter & Gamble's Scope at 23% and Pfizer's Plax at 14.5%, according to industry audits.

W-L expanded the Benadryl line with Benadryl Plus Nighttime liquid cold relief medication, which competes in the $178 million nighttime liquids segment of the $1.1 billion cough-cold category, according to Kline & Co., Fairfield, N.J. It will go up against Richardson-Vicks' Nyquil, the longtime leader in the entire category.

Benadryl, an antihistamine, turned from prescription-only status to OTC in 1985 as an allergy remedy. It has since passed one-time allergy market leader Schering-Plough's Chlor-Trimeton. In late 1988, Benadryl had a 40% share of the near $125 million allergy relief segment, followed by Chlor-Trimeton's 30%.

W-L, however, is still struggling for presence in the larger cough-colds segment. Last year, W-L introduced Benadryl Plus, a multi-symptom cold reliever. The product is not among the top-selling remedies in the category. In 1988, according to Kline & Co., Richardson-Vicks' Nyquil continued to lead the category with a 12% share, followed by Alka-Seltzer Plus at 10%, Burroughs-Wellcome's Sudafed and Actifed, at a combined 9%; SmithKline Beecham's Contac at 8% and Schering-Plough's Drixoral and A.H. Robins' Dimetapp, tied at 7% each.

W-L introduced assorted fruit flavors of Rolaids. The brand had an estimated 13% share for the 12 months ending in June 1989 of the $900 million antacid market behind Rorer's Maalox, with just under 15%. P&G's Pepto-Bismol and Norcliff-Thayer's Tums had just under 14% each and Stuart's Mylanta, 11%.

At American-Chicle, W-L's gum and mints subsidiary, the company rolled national with Sugarfree Dentyne gum, its first U.S. line extension in the gum's 90-year history. Sugarless Dentyne has been in Canada for two years, where the company says it more than doubled market share of the Dentyne franchise.

W-L is offering the product because sugarfree gum now represents 50% of the nation's $1 billion spent on chewing gum. Sugarfree Dentyne is getting $4 million in TV and print ads this year, which broke in mid-summer via Young & Rubicam.

W-L moved to expand its Schick razor franchise with the May introduction of Schick Slim Twin, a narrow cartridge razor system which is getting more than $12 million in advertising and promotion, including a variety of couponing programs and a free razor offer. Gillette had more than 60% of the $720 million wet shave market, followed by Schick's 15%.

One product that saw major spending cuts was W-L's Promega Fish Oil. The company had high hopes for fish oil in 1987 but the category fell apart.

FDA approval came this year for the prescription drug, Lopid, for reducing the risk of coronary heart disease. The approval came on the heels of the November national roll-out of Cholybar, a prescription drug that reduces cholesterol levels.

With heart disease America's leading killer, analyst Robert Benezra of H.C. Wainwright, Boston, says the market for cholesterol-reducing drugs could reach $1 billion by 1993.

Late in 1988, Wendy's International amended its umbrella advertising theme, adding the phrase "and a whole lot more" to the end of its "The best burgers in the business" signature.

It was a small change in some ways, but indicative of Wendy's patient approach to marketing as it rebuilds the financial strength and marketplace power it enjoyed five years ago.

That rebuilding continues to proceed too slowly for some Wall Street analysts, with the company making few major changes or taking bold chances.

The company's net income in 1988 rose to $28.5 million, still short of the $76.2 million it posted in 1985, but considerable improvement over $5 million in 1987 and a net loss of $5 million in 1986.

Similarly, average per-store sales are struggling to regain the levels achieved earlier in the decade. Company-operated restaurants averaged sales of $793,000 in 1988, slightly better than 1987's average of $786,000 but not back to 1984's average of $874,000 when "Where's the beef?" was a national catch phrase and Wendy's was riding high. Average sales for franchisees' restaurants dropped off even more sharply and have been slower to recover.

Wendy's slide has cost it market share in a fairly stagnant $60 billion fast-food market that has become a highly competitive arena. Wendy's has lost a notch in the ranking of the top hamburger chains, having been replaced in the No. 3 spot behind McDonald's and Burger King by Hardee's Food Systems. Wendy's commands an approximate 4.5% share. McDonald's holds a 19% share, based on its U.S. sales of $11.4 billion.

To regain market share and sales momentum, Wendy's marketing strategy has been to focus primarily on the hamburgers that are its menu backbone. But it also promotes the "whole lot more" part of its ad theme.

In April 1989, Wendy's launched a new effort it dubbed its "Victory" campaign. Based on a two-year-long consumer survey that it claims shows its hamburgers preferred over those of its competitors, the campaign featured company founder and Senior Chairman of the Board R. David Thomas delivering the message "If we didn't have the best burgers in the business, I woul'n't have named the place after my daughter."

Heralding its name change with a print campaign that broke in November, Whitman Corp. (formerly I.C. Industries) moved to establish its new identity as a consumer goods and services company by adding three new companies to its Pet Inc. division and expanding its Pepsi-Cola General Bottlers operations in Wisconsin.

The company's new name was derived from Whitman's Chocolates, a Pet candy division, and followed the company's spinoff of Illinois Central Railroad to shareholders and the $1.3 billion sale in April of Pneumo-Abex, aerospace and military company.

Whitman's three consumer core companies include St. Louis-based Pet and Pepsi General and Midas International Corp., both of Chicago.

With acquisitions and cost-cutting accompanying the restructuring, Whitman cut its ad costs by an estimated 10.6% in 1988. Media budgets were reduced for many major product lines, except Midas Muffler.

The Midas division purchased 50 more franchised shops, mostly in the New York-New Jersey-Philadelphia area. Midas says in 1988 it held a 22% share of the exhaust replacement market, more than 13% of the brake service market and 4% of the overall shock absorber, strut and front-end replacement market. Midas' measured spending rose 19.1% to $41.7 million, nearly all in network and spot TV.

Pet cut back media spending, especially on Old El Paso food products, which dropped 66% to $2.8 million. Ad outlays fell 50% for Progresso Soup to $6.6 million and 41% for Accent Flavoring to $2.4 million. To compensate for these cuts, Pet continues to increase its use of merchandising programs, special promotions and samplings, according to a Pet spokesman.

Old El Paso holds a 32% share of the dry grocery Mexican market and a 9% share of the frozen Mexican food market; Progresso, 29.9% share of the ready-to-serve market and Accent, 48.7% share of its market, the company says.

Wrigley's six key brands—Big Red, Doublemint, Extra, Freedent, Juicy Fruit and Spearmint—gave the company a 47% share of the $1.8 billion chewing gum market worldwide, virtually even with 1987.

To protect that market share, the company spent $123 million on measured advertising in 1988, up about 13.4%.

An incremental $6 million was spent in the fourth quarter on a new corporate ad campaign; themed "Share a little piece of America," the 60-second TV spot featured vignettes of consumers enjoying gum in a variety of settings, ranging from a wedding to a football game. Produced by Wrigley agency BBDO, Chicago, the campaign was designed to counter some of the gum market's toughest problems about social acceptability. The four top Wrigley brands—Big Red, Doublemint, Juicy Fruit and Spearmint, which still represent a majority of Wrigley sales—are featured in the spot.

The biggest chunk of individual brand spending went to Spearmint, which received $30.7 million in measured media. After introducing an unusual, jingle-less, 60-second TV spot for Spearmint, Wrigley used that "Total chewing satisfaction" tagline and computer graphics in a variety of 30-second executions.

An additional $21.4 million went to advertise five-year-old sugarfree Extra gum, now the market's No. 2 sugarless gum (behind Warner-Lambert's Trident) with nearly as large a market share as the more-established Doublemint and Spearmint. Wrigley's biggest product news was the addition of cinnamon and Winter Fresh flavors to the Extra line; the new products were featured in print ads and in tags to the regular Extra TV spots.

Extra and Big Red gum were the major contributors to the company's 4% increase in U.S. unit sales during 1988.

Infiniti plans to show car in new ads

CARSON, Calif.—Nissan's Infiniti division on Oct. 23 breaks a regional campaign in about 30 markets, using a new series of "nature scene" spots with a special ending that reveals the car for the first time. Sources describe the cars as being seen in a muted, almost ghostlike fashion.

Following that brief glimpse of one of Infiniti's two models, one or more dealer names will appear on the screen.

Some dealers start receiving cars Oct. 16; the car will officially be available to consumers starting Nov. 6.

That regional effort uses new network and cable TV spots that break Oct. 16 as the second wave of Infiniti's $60 million-plus ad program. The commercials, running through early January, continue the subtle Japanese-style approach now being used for the luxury car.

Although the new batch of commercials includes more information about Infiniti's two models, automotive sources said, only those shown regionally after Oct. 23 show the car.

Both efforts will be unveiled at a Detroit news conference this week, where automotive reporters and editors will be able to test-drive the new cars and learn about their technical details.

Sources said Infiniti is also considering airing on network TV a re-edited version of the corporate video shown to prospective dealers early this year. The low-key video features an older man and a younger man sitting in a restaurant discussing the concept of luxury.

If Infiniti decides to go ahead with this commercial, the length of which is undetermined, the one-time Nov. 5 airing would be heavily promoted in advance as a marketing "event."

Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos, Inglewood, Calif., handles Infiniti. Both Nissan and agency officials declined comment on ad plans.

The video was created by Bill Heater and Don Easdon, the exec VP-creative directors responsible for Infiniti's advertising. Mr. Heater, who provided

Whittle eyes seniors

'Special Reports' spinoff seen in '90 or '91

By Scott Donaton

Whittle Communications is preparing a spinoff of Special Reports aimed at the mature market, sources say.

A source close to Whittle confirmed the company is planning to launch a magazine system designed to reach adults ages 50 and older. The still-untitled medium could roll out in late 1990 or early 1991.

"They're very excited about the prospects," the source said.

Whittle Vice Chairman Alan Greenberg wouldn't confirm the launch. But he said, "We don't plan to stop with just Special Reports as it is now known. We are working on a lot of products. There are potential spinoffs of Special Reports, and that could be one. There aren't many seniors where we're at now," referring to Special Reports.

Lakeside Pharmaceuticals, for its Citrucel fiber laxative, is a charter advertiser in Special Reports. Lakeside got involved with Whittle so it could have the first opportunity to advertise in the new project for seniors, said Ryan Abbate, Lakeside's ad manager.

"We're looking ahead to [being involved with] further Special Reports properties, like the gray market Special Reports that's in the works," Mr. Abbate said.

Details of the new system are sketchy, but it will likely resemble the current Special Reports, a series of six quarterlies, each devoted to a single topic

The magazines will be distributed through the waiting rooms of gerontologists and in other places frequented by older adults, such as nursing homes, a source close to the project said.

The new system would represent direct or

Finally.

At long last, Burger King Corp. has found an identity.

After years of disarray, operational and management upheaval, lost market share, advertising multiple-personality disorder and, ultimately, takeover by foreigners, the world's second-biggest hamburger slinger has decided what it wants to be.

It wants to be Pepsi-Cola.

Isn't it funny how you always find something in the last place you look? Burger King searched high and low for a marketing strategy and there it was, right on TV. Meet the new Burger King: a regeneration ahead.

Burger King cozies up to consumers

MIAMI—Burger King Corp. wants to do more than break some rules. It wants to quit the game.

The No. 2 hamburger chain is gambling that a long-term commitment to establishing a relationship with consumers and a kinder, gentler image will pay off more than mimicking the fast-food industry's short-term, "commodity" marketing strategy based on price.

Burger King's $150 mill[illegible] "Sometimes you've gotta break the rules" ad campaign, starting this week, is intended to set it apart from competitors and its own past.

Coffee giants battle for gourmet control

By Judann Dagnoli and Laurie Freeman

The clash of the coffee titans is spilling onto Colombian ground as Procter & Gamble Co. rolls out Folgers Gourmet Supreme and General Foods USA starts touting a whole-bean version of its Yuban brand.

Folgers Gourmet Supreme is F&G's first entry in the gourmet coffee segment and represents its response to rival General Foods' new Maxwell House Colombian Supreme. The General Foods product hit store shelves east of the Rockies last May and is now rolling into the remaining 15% of the country.

An estimated $10 million-to-$15 million TV and print campaign for Folgers Gourmet Supreme from N W Ayer, New York, breaks this month. Ayer won the assignment last April from Wells, Rich, Greene.

General Foods is staying one step ahead in the gourmet coffee race with Yuban Whole Bean coffee. Testing in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland, Ore., the line extension of the primarily West Coast-distributed Yuban is supported with local newspaper ads themed "The whole bean and nothing but the bean."

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, New York, handles.

Maxwell House Colombian Supreme and Yuban Whole Bean are 100% Colombian; Folgers Gourmet Supreme is a mix of Colombian and Arabica coffee beans.

Although P&G and General Foods are locked in close battle for the overall lead in the coffee market—P&G now has a 31% share in supermarkets compared with General Foods' 30.6%, one source said—General Foods dominates the gourmet segment.

The company has been grinding out upscale coffee products at a rapid-fire pace, including Colombian Supreme, Maxwell House Rich French Roast and the new Yuban within the past six months. General Foods also markets Maxwell House Private Collection.

Industry sources say falling coffee consumption is influencing marketers to introduce high-price, high-margin gourmet coffees.

"Consumers are drinking less coffee, but they are drinking better coffee," one source said.

Pound sales of coffee in supermarkets dropped 9% to 811 million for the year ended July 14, from the same period a year earlier, Arbitron/SAMI reported.

But gourmet coffee sales are on the rise, FIND/SVP reported, with sales in the segment at $600 million last year, up from $500 million in 1987.

The research company said the segment has grown about 20% for each of the past five years and now accounts for 8% of the overall $6.3 billion coffee market.

Colombian blends have been riding this wave, constituting 5% of total U.S. coffee sales, the National Federation of Coffee Growers of Colombia reported.

Both the new Folgers and Yuban entries are premium-price.

Packaged in black cans with gold lettering, Folgers Gourmet Supreme is sold in 16 varieties, including a brick pack and three can sizes in regular and decaffeinated for automatic drip and percolator/regular grinds.

P&G said Gourmet Supreme will be priced about 30¢ higher than regular Folgers at wholesale.

The marketer wouldn't comment on ad spending or ad plans for Gourmet Supreme but said a free standing newspaper insert in November will offer a free can for every two cans purchased. □

Murdoch beefs up FSIs

Industry questions wisdom of holiday drops

By Alison Fahey

Starting in 1991, Rupert Murdoch's News America Publishing will publish free standing inserts every Sunday, an industry first that outside executives characterized as risky.

The schedule will include six dates when rival Valassis Inserts doesn't plan to drop inserts.

Valassis and News America's Quad Marketing and Product Movers often publish FSIs on the same Sunday. In 1991, Valassis will drop 46 Sunday inserts; Product Movers plans 34 and Quad plans 28.

News America has about 55% of the estimated $850 million FSI market; Valassis about 45%.

The six extra dates, to be evenly divided between Quad and Product Movers, coincide with holidays, considered poor drop times because of low newspaper readership and coupon redemption rates.

"If it doesn't work, it'll leave a bad taste. Whenever someone does something new, they run the risk of hurting their image," said Elliott Young, president of Perception Research Services, which tracks FSI use and effectiveness. "I think [marketers] will buy the space simply to reach more people, but they will scrutinize the performance," and repeat purchases may not materialize.

"They are putting their money on the line either way. Without going through a test, they are taking an undue risk."

"They are putting their money on the line either way," said Vincent Sottosanti, president of promotion agency Comart-KLP, New York. "Without going through a test, they are taking an undue risk."

News America will announce the plan this week. The company said the move could bring solace to marketers who complain FSIs are too hard to schedule and are ineffective.

"This is the first time in the 20 years of the industry that marketers don't have to worry about getting FSI coverage. We have complete market and date coverage, and we have six exclusive dates to add impact," said Ken Bortner, president of News America's FSI Division.

Still, observers have doubts.

"My gut reaction is that historically, traditionally, holidays are lousy days to drop offers, and I don't think you're going to change consumer behavior," said William A. Robinson, ceo of the Chicago-based promotion agency that bears his name.

Said David Brandon, president-ceo of Valassis: "We've concluded that there's four, five or six Sundays when we'd love to keep our presses going and make business for ourselves, but we didn't see it as viable for our customers."

But Mr. Bortner said the company is confident the space will attract some marketers.

Hollywood gets world view

By Marcy Magiera

With foreign ownership invading Hollywood, the traditional film marketing rules may be rewritten.

Sony Corp.'s announcement last week of its intention to acquire Columbia Pictures Entertainment marked the third of Hollywood's major movie studios to fall ...eas interests.

Along with Sony, Qintex Australia's planned buyout of MGM/-UA Communications Co. could signal a tighter rein on marketing costs, greater attention to global marketing and increased home video promotion, Hollywood observers say.

A third Hollywood giant, Fox Film Corp., already is owned by Australian media magnate Rupert Murdoch through his News Corp.

The new owners are likely to broaden the view of studio marketing executives, one observer said.

Advertising and publicity campaigns could be designed with a more international flavor and "be more sensitive to local customs," said Gordon Weaver, president Gordon Weaver Co., an entertainment marketing consultancy.

Big Mac no cluck

In your article about McDonald's chicken (AA, Sept. 4), a Church's fried chicken franchisee, Steve Eckhardt, said he thought "McDonald's could confuse its customers by rolling out too many different new products." Well, Steve, hardly any of the nearly 20 million customers who visit McDonald's restaurants each day drive up by accident, and even fewer are confused or disappointed as a result of their visit.

It's true McDonald's takes the hamburger business more seriously than anyone else, but it's also true that McDonald's takes the dining-out business seriously. McDonald's didn't wait for the world to start demanding chicken on the menu. Millions of folks demanding something you don't serve in your restaurants each day would not be a pleasant situation. That is why McDonald's is the leader, not a follower.

Although it has been more than three years since I worked as Ronald McDonald's press secretary, I am convinced McDonald's nearest competition is still the decision to eat at home.

A far-out correction

Rance Crain, in his column, exaggerated slightly, perhaps by a factor of a billion billion, when he said that colonizing Mars would place us in competition with the rest of the universe (AA, Sept. 4). We would at most be challenged by aliens from a few nearby star systems, or maybe 1/500,000 of the huge Milky Way galaxy. In turn, there are approximately one billion other galaxies.

Anyhow, we should colonize the moon first. It's not only more doable, but may be less of a threat to our close neighbors in Alpha Centauri.

Crossing the boundaries

According to this ad, our first president crossed the Potomac River with such essential hardware as "sturdy, attractive cabinets, cooling modules" and more. Of course he did; he was revolutionary!

Clearly, this is an ad we can do without.

'GQ' vs. 'Esquire'

Re: "Brady's Bunch" item about GQ's September issue (506 pages) being the "biggest issue of a men's magazine in publishing history" (AA, Aug. 28).

Wrong! The October 1973 (40th anniversary) issue of Esquire contained 564 pages. It included Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Wolfe, Capote and many more of the great Arnold Gingrich's literary cronies.

The December 1983 Esquire was 618 pages. As VP-group advertising director at the time, it was particularly gratifying because only a few years before the magazine had been given up for dead by most advertisers.

While the December 1983 issue of Esquire may have been a total of 618 pages, according to PIB, there were 285.05 advertising pages in that issue (some ad/edit ratio, right?).

The September 1989 issue of GQ closed at 342 advertising pages with a very healthy ad/edit ratio. So, I guess you can say that the September issue had more advertising pages than any men's magazine in history!

Don't give in to drugs

Sid "Just-Say-Yes" Bernstein is at it again—telling us that if we simply legalize drugs, the problems drugs cause will disappear (AA, Sept. 11).

Sure. And the repeal of Prohibition eliminated all the problems caused by liquor.

Bernstein seems to think that drugs are profitable because illegality lets dealers charge high prices. Wrong, Sid—competition and the spirit of American enterprise have made drugs nice and cheap. In most cities, you can get a line of coke or a smoke of crack for less than the price of dinner and a movie.

The problem is that, for addicts, one isn't enough. Drugs are obscenely profitable NOT because the unit price is high, but because demand is insatiable.

Get real, Sid. Drug problems are not caused by drug dealers or drug profits. They're caused by drugs themselves.

Drugs kill people. They ruin lives. They destroy the individual freedom and responsibility that are the very foundation of our democratic society. We can't afford to give in to them. It won't be easy—but we've got to fight.

Jim Williams
Omaha, Neb.

I applaud Sid Bernstein's stand on legalizing drugs.

Opposition to legalization of drugs is basically an ideological concept. It's a moral issue. It is thus an ideological war . . . similarly Prohibition.

Within this generation we have fought and lost every ideological war in which we've engaged—Korea, Vietnam and, currently, Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Will we never learn?

The old saw "If you can't beat 'em, join 'em" applies here. Failure to recognize this doleful truth is bleeding our great country of dollars, causing loss of respect for law and order, corrupting law enforcement personnel, etc.

We can stop all this and provide hospitalization and counseling to the addicts based on revenue derived from legalized drug sales.

Fortunately, Ad Age has the ear of our best communicators. So keep telling them. It may bring us to our senses!

A Classic sexist ad

Words cannot fully describe why this local Coca-Cola promotion on the Jersey Shore is a Classic case of an ad we can do without, but for starters let's try "sexist," "sophomoric" and "stupid."

On the other hand, "Pick me up," if hyphenated, could simply be a reference to the stimulating qualities of Coca-Cola's caffeine ingredient. . . . Nah!

I sure hope that the implicit endorsement of co-op funding doesn't exist for this type of four-color fiasco!

Like a cheap paperback

Good god. That Mr. Brady had to endure a sponge bath and open windows all on the same day is an outrage. How dare those people subject a group of obviously superior Americans to such untenable conditions! This is clearly an act of war.

Mr. Brady's recent report on Forbes' fab bash (AA, Aug. 28) read like a cheap paperback, complete with caricatures of bitchy women and egocentric men. (What, no Zsa-Zsa?) The sad thing is these people are real.

The sadder thing is that I actually read it.

Time for continuity programs

In response to your Aug. 7 article "Purse strings tighten despite ads," I strongly agree with Prof. Leslie Telser that in these times of cautious consumer spending, marketers should concentrate on increasing their market share by convincing consumers to switch brands.

However, when product identity is established and product recognition has been achieved, advertising has done its job and can do little more to move consumers from one brand to another.

In an economic environment such as we are experiencing today, smart product managers are looking toward strategic sales promotion as a means of swaying consumers to their brand. Strategic continuity programs are key to getting the consumer to switch brands. These programs tell the consumer to buy now and to keep

Top magazines report big gains in ad dollars

By Ira Teinowitz

This year may turn out to be a glorious one for magazine advertising, the Publishers Information Bureau reports.

PIB last week said that through Aug. 31, 141 of the nation's top 165 magazines showed increases in ad dollars, while double-digit gains were common.

Of the top 20 revenue-producing magazines, double-digit gainers include People, up 13.1%; Business Week, up 16.6%; Fortune, up 21.3%; Family Circle, up 17.0%; U.S. News & World Report, up 20.1%; Good Housekeeping, up 12.5%; Forbes, up 20.6%; Cosmopolitan, up 11.6%; Woman's Day, up 25.3%; Ladies' Home Journal, up 26.6%; Vogue, up 14.9%; and McCall's, up 33.1%.

The few losers in the top 20, however, included two of the nation's largest magazines. TV Guide was down 0.7%, and Reader's Digest was down 1.6%. Money was also down 1.2%.

PIB revenue figures can, by nature, be somewhat optimistic. Dollar estimates are calculated based on ad pages at published category rates and don't reflect the discounting common at magazines.

Still, the overall revenue growth of 12% through August to $4 billion for the nation's 165 top revenue magazines is healthy. Ad pages were up 4.2%.

"Whether or not the [revenue] numbers are exactly right, the per cent changes are right on the nose," said James Guthrie, exec VP of the Magazine Publishers of America.

Mr. Guthrie said the MPA's own analysis of first-quarter numbers shows magazines are capturing a growing share of ad dollars, a trend he expects to continue.

"The '90s will be the decade of magazines as more and more advertisers look to niche marketing and tighter definitions of customers," he said.

Mr. Guthrie said magazines have seen the biggest gains in food advertising, where newspapers have been losing.

Overall, network TV has been the main loser, with business from travel companies and beer and wine producers off, he said.

Mr. Guthrie said the shift in dollars from promotions to brand advertising has also benefited magazines.

"Major food manufacturers are going for brand equity building instead of the short-term burst for price considerations," he said.

The growth was also apparent in newspaper supplements with Parade up 16.4% in revenues and USA Weekend up 22.2%. □

'Apartment Life' suits Chevy

By Scott Hume

Recognizing that not all young adults trade up from apartment living to home ownership, Meredith Corp. is reviving Apartment Life.

The magazine will go on sale nationally Oct. 31 with a cover price of $2.95, distribution of 350,000 copies and a single advertiser, General Motors Corp.'s Chevrolet division (AA, Sept. 18).

Chevrolet bought 20 pages of ads in the first issue, which will have a total folio of 128 pages. A second issue is planned for May, again solely sponsored by the automaker. After that, Meredith hopes Apartment Life will become a quarterly.

"There are no long-term contracts signed, but we hope we can work with Chevrolet through 1990" for a total of four issues, said Jerry Ward, who heads Meredith's Better Homes & Gardens Special Interest Publications group and who serves as publisher of Apartment Life.

Mr. Ward declined to detail the cost of the buy.

Meredith in 1969 launched Apartment Ideas, an every-other-monthly that it renamed Apartment Life a year later. In 1981, the publication was retooled as a more upscale magazine called Metropolitan Home.

"The new Apartment Life will still target young singles, couples and marrieds ages 20 to 35, but with a broader focus than before," Mr. Ward said. Besides furnishings, the magazine will cover travel, food, fashion, fitness and music, he said. □

Burger King ads will count

By Scott Hume

Burger King Corp.'s new ad campaign has the potential to significantly boost the No. 2 burger chain's market position.

A nationwide poll of consumers shows that a significant percentage already patronize Burger King, that those who do are overwhelmingly positive about the chain and that advertising can influence many consumers' choice of which chain they visit.

In other words, those who patronize Burger King like it. If the company's new marketing strategy can attract a significant number of new customers, the opportunity exists to improve Burger King's 17% share of the $60 billion fast-food market.

For the survey, conducted in May for Advertising Age by the Gallup Organization, a random sample of 1,000 adults was asked how many times in the previous 30 days they'd visited a Burger King, either eating in or using a drive-through window.

Overall, 44% said they'd visited at least once, 46% said they hadn't and 10% declined to answer. For those who'd visited a Burger King, the mean number of visits was nearly three times (2.96).

Burger King's strongest adult patronage base (as with most fast-food chains) comes from people ages 18 to 34: 59% of this group said they had visited the chain at least once.

The mean number of visits during the previous 30 days also was highest among this group: 3.2 times.

Not surprisingly, the numbers fall off for older consumers. Among respondents ages 35 to 54, 44% had visited at least once, 45% hadn't been to a Burger King and 11% had no answer. The mean number of visits for middle-age consumers was 2.79.

Less than one-quarter of consumers ages 55 or older said they'd eaten at Burger King during the previous month; 63% hadn't visited and 14% had no reply.

But, while the patronage base among this group was relatively low, Burger King still has its share of regulars from its ranks: mean number of visits from older patrons was 2.49.

Burger King is most popular in South Central states, where the mean number of visits was 3.44. The chain has the biggest opportunity for improvement in the Midwest and North Central states, where the mean was 2.55 visits.

As any retailer knows, customer traffic is worthless without customer satisfaction. But Burger King patrons like the restaurants.

Overall, 86% of those who'd visited Burger King at least once rated their most recent visit a pleasant experience. That includes 83% of men surveyed and 88% of women.

Positive word-of-mouth advertising from these satisfied patrons can help but hasn't been enough to significantly boost Burger King's sales.

That's where the new ad messages come in, and the survey reveals the extent to which ads can have an impact.

Respondents were asked to rank the power of a chain's advertising to influence their choice of which fast-food restaurant to visit.

Seventeen percent of the sample rated advertising very influential in their decision-making, and another 30% said it's somewhat influential. But a little more than half (53%) said advertising has no influence on them.

Significantly, the key demographic group—adults 18 to 34—are the most apt to be swayed by ads: 21% rated ad messages very influential.

Burger King recently reassigned its Hispanic ad account to Sosa & Associates, San Antonio, Texas, an assignment the survey shows to have especially high potential. While 15% of the white consumers polled rated advertising very influential, 41% of Hispanic consumers rated ad messages a significant influence.

Among black consumers, 30% said their choice of a fast-food restaurant was very likely to be influenced by the ads they see and hear.

The phone survey has a margin of error of 3.1%. □ ceo by Grand Metropolitan after its $5.79 billion acquisition of Pillsbury Co. last December.

The status quo was "unacceptable not just as far as [declining sales at] a few restaurants here and there," Mr. Gibbons continued. "The kind of status quo I'm talking about is the whole attitude that pervaded the management and operations. That has had to change, and this [campaign] is part of it.

"It's not just an ad campaign. It's a bit of a rallying call. It's saying, 'This is the personality you need to recognize when you think of Burger King in the 1990s.' "

The first phase of that personality change includes eight TV commercials (four 30-second spots, four running in both 30- and 60-second versions) produced by the rule-breaking tandem of national agencies hired in May.

Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, New York, assigned oversight of "brand retailing" ads, created five of the eight spots ("Mr. Mom," "Perfect Date," "Carrier," "Rehearsal" and "Ship/Doubles").

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles is represented by three spots ("Garage," "Nightwatchman" and "Wrong Number") in its role as "brand identity" agency.

What they all share, said Burger King VP-Creative Jeff Myers, is "a more contemporary, hipper way to embody Burger King. This is not 'How fast can we get people to memorize a jingle?' because there is no jingle. This campaign is about getting people to think differently about Burger King."

In addition to the network TV effort, Burger King on Oct. 1 began a massive radio campaign that it says means an average 150 spots a day in every major market for two weeks.

Burger King will spend up to 20% of its approximately $150 million media budget in the next 12 months on radio, by far its largest commitment to that medium, executives said.

D'Arcy created the radio spots, featuring individualized versions of a basic musical theme by such artists as the Fabulous Thunderbirds, John Lee Hooker, Paul Shaffer and the World's Most Dangerous Band, and Mel Torme.

Tone-Loc is one of the artists featured in spots from Uni-World Group, New York, and Sosa & Associates, San Antonio, Texas, has created a series of Hispanic music tracks.

The eight TV commercials breaking Oct. 4 are intended to reshape Burger King's image. Even "Ship/Doubles," introducing the new BK Doubles sandwiches (AA, Sept. 25), downplays the traditional product shots in favor of humor.

"When 96% of the American public knows what a Whopper is, why am I going to spend time on the tube telling them what they already know?" said Gary Langstaff, exec VP-marketing. "We said, 'No, we're going to change the dialogue.' We're going to entertain and, yes, we're going to inform, and we're going to do it with a sense of humor, a little lightness and a wink of the eye. And we're going to be provocative in terms of executional technique."

"When 96% of the American public knows what a Whopper is, why am I going to spend time on the tube telling them what they already know?"

Burger King—currently offering a different sandwich each day for 99¢—will still selectively use discount promotions, Mr. Langstaff said. But he's determined discounting won't be the rule.

"This business is wedded to the idea that you've got to show the product [on TV] for 24 seconds and, worse, discount it to get people's attention, both of which I think are fundamentally stupid executions," Mr. Langstaff said.

"Discounting has evolved from tactic, where it has a very viable role, to strategy. It's the stupidest thing I've ever heard," he said. "And the tragedy of it is that with the advent of the microwave, the quality credentials of our business went up because consumers were changing the way they're preparing food at home.

"We didn't do a damn thing different, but yet we benefited from the changing environment at home. And now we're about to blow it because the marketing geniuses [in this industry] can't find a way to get out [of discounting]."

Mr. Langstaff acknowledged he and Burger King raised some eyebrows by "breaking rule No. 1 in hiring agencies by hiring two." He pointed to the new creative as proof the decision was a sound one, though he admitted it was a "management challenge."

"The key [to the two-agency split] was managing the [creative] process, and that was where Jeff Myers became so important," Mr. Langstaff said. "It was a tough job. The challenge was it has to be managed, because if it wasn't managed it was going to spin out of control.

"You had capabilities but also powerful egos" at the two shops, he said.

The dual agency setup "worked better than we expected," Mr. Myers said. "There's no denying that it took some work and attention, but the focus was on getting the job done.

"We hired two of the best general-market agencies money could buy," he said, smiling. "And, yes, they have primary and secondary responsibilities. But there's no chart that says, 'OK, you can do this but, no, not that, work.' "

"We all have had equal input," said UniWorld President Herb Kemp. "Everything has been a matter of 'Here's where we are, here's where we want to go. Who can do it best?' "

Said Harvey Hoffenberg, Saatchi vice chairman-executive creative director: "This [team concept] isn't about dividing things up. We agreed on an attitude, a tone of voice that all the advertising needed to carry, and we've kept focused on that."

"And the result is that we've wrested away creative leadership," said Saatchi Exec VP Richard Pounder. "This advertising is better and fresher than anything coming out of Oak Brook [Ill., headquarters for McDonald's Corp.].

"It has a better standard of energy and reward than consumers are getting from the guy resting on his laurels. It'll hit them [McDonald's] shortly: They've lost it, gang." □ trying to build your creative reputation, you need to be prepared to make those sorts of investments."

DMB&B

Judy Wald, president of the Judy Wald Agency, a recruiter specializing in placement of agency creatives, said top creative people are more in demand now than ever.

Ms. Wald contended that large shops like D'Arcy and Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising—Burger King's other shop—are hurting for talent.

"Obviously, neither one of those agencies was known for brilliant, fantastic creative," she said. "They both have to shore up, they feel, and put the emphasis back on the creative product."

Ms. Wald has been working with both agencies on their creative searches. She declined to discuss specifics of the D'Arcy offer.

Since being awarded the Burger King account, D'Arcy has hired John Neiman, the former McCann-Erickson Worldwide exec VP-executive creative director, as vice chairman-chief creative officer of its USA division.

The agency also hired several senior creatives to work exclusively on the Burger King business, including Senior VP-Creative Director David Hale from J. Walter Thompson USA; Senior VP-Associate Creative Directors David Levine from McCann and Nick Vitale from Lintas:New York; and VP-Executive Producer and Associate Creative Director Bruce Davidson from Backer Spielvogel Bates (see item on Page 50).

Mr. Neiman's package was richer than the one that was turned down, but the rest of those hired got less than the rejected offer, sources said.

Mr. Neiman declined to comment on his compensation package.

At most agencies, a separate creative staff for one account would be unusual, but D'Arcy earlier this year divided its New York office into a number of mini-agencies, some handling one or two clients.

Saatchi also lured a new creative director earlier in the year with a rich pact, Vice Chairman Harvey Hoffenberg, formerly at BBDO Worldwide. Mr. Hoffenberg, however, works on many of the agency's accounts in addition to Burger King.

D'Arcy also hired creative talent to work on General Foods USA's $50 million Maxwell House coffee account it won in May, led by Senior VP-Creative Director Michael Shevack, also from BBDO.

Mr. Wilhite said by spending money on big-ticket talent, the agency is sending a message to the industry.

"If we can communicate to the outside world the fact that we are able to attract, satisfy and give long-term sustenance to people of the ilk of David Hale, Nick Vitale, David Levine and Michael Shevack, that is going to say to their peers in the marketplace that DMB&B/USA, specifically the New York office, is a place where I, too, can feel comfortable," Mr. Wilhite said.

"I think that would be a change in perspective on the part of a lot of folks who heretofore did not view the agency in that way," he added.

D'Arcy isn't the only big agency in the market for senior creative help. Ogilvy & Mather and Grey Advertising are looking for top creative directors, and if D'Arcy's lucrative offer is any indication, both will have to pay top dollar to lure big names from other agencies.

"That's what you've got to pay these days to get the right guy at the right time," one agency executive said. □

Y&R hit by U.S. indictment

New York chief Klein also charged in tourism-ad case

By Jon Lafayette

Young & Rubicam, the nation's largest ad agency, and one of its top executives were indicted Friday on federal conspiracy and racketeering charges in an alleged kickback scheme involving the Jamaica Tourist Board.

Two former Y&R executives also were indicted along with two Jamaicans with ties to the tourist board.

Y&R denied the allegations.

The indictment was handed down by a federal grand jury in New Haven, Conn.

Arthur Klein, president of Y&R's flagship New York office; Thomas Spangenberg, a former senior VP-management supervisor; and the agency itself were charged with conspiring to violate the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

All three were accused of violating the federal Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organization Act, originally designed to combat organized crime but also used to prosecute white-collar crimes.

The two Jamaicans, former Tourism Minister Eric Anthony Abrahams and businessman Arnold Foote Jr., were charged with RICO violations, while Steven McKenna, former Y&R senior VP now at subsidiary Wunderman Worldwide, was indicted for perjury.

Another Y&R executive, VP-Account Supervisor Edward J. Daley, was named as an unindicted co-conspirator. Sources say Mr. Daley has received immunity from prosecution in return for his testimony.

The indictment alleges that in 1981, Y&R paid kickbacks to the two Jamaicans in return for their influence in obtaining for Y&R the tourism board's $8 million-to-$10 million ad account.

The agency was awarded the account in 1981 and went on to create the well-known "Come back to Jamaica" campaign.

Y&R kept the business this year after a review.

In addition, the defendants allegedly created a sham ad agency known as Ad Ventures in the Cayman Islands to conceal the kickback scheme.

Y&R says the charges are "based on speculation and innuendo and are without substance or merit."

Y&R then entered into a consulting contract with Ad Ventures "so as to provide an ostensibly legitimate reason for the kickback payments," said Stanley A. Twardy Jr., U.S. Attorney for Connecticut.

The government is also asking Y&R to forfeit its gross profits on the Jamaica account, about $3.75 million, and for the Jamaican defendants to forfeit the alleged kickbacks, allegedly totaling about $900,000.

If convicted of conspiracy, Messrs. Klein and Spangenberg could be imprisoned for up to five years and fined $250,000, while Y&R could be fined $500,000.

RICO charges carry a maximum sentence of 20 years imprisonment and a $250,000 fine upon conviction for individuals and a possible $500,000 fine for companies. Perjury charges carry a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment and a fine of $250,000.

In a statement, Y&R said the charges were "based on speculation and innuendo and are without substance or merit."

ANA members set to defend brand equity

By Judann Dagnoli and Julie Liesse Erickson

HOT SPRINGS, Va.—Brand equity is under attack, and advertisers are fighting back.

That was the message at the 80th annual meeting of the Association of National Advertisers here Oct. 1 to 4, where 350 marketers warned that regulatory forces, retailer power, bottom-line focus and climbing media costs are squeezing ad budgets and jeopardizing brands.

"We're less concerned than we were last year about the 'grossed-up' issues, like megamergers and agency compensation, and more concerned about market issues," said Kim Armstrong, director of advertising and promotions for AT&T Co. and chairwoman of the ANA Committee on Nominations.

Marketers blamed themselves for consumers' waning confidence in advertising, a factor that's hurting brands.

Outgoing ANA Chairman and Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp. VP Joseph Doherty said the industry should take stronger public stances on such issues as tobacco, liquor and political advertising to help change the public's view of the industry as "snake oil salesmen."

This "tendency to be wary of advertising is something we ought to heed seriously," he said.

Perhaps the single biggest threat to brand equity is promotional spending, including slotting allowances paid to retailers to gain shelf space, executives said.

One ANA source said several

Lord Geller case settled

NEW YORK—Lord Einstein O'Neill & Partners late Friday agreed to pay $7 million to WPP Group in an unexpected settlement of WPP's lawsuit against the breakaway agency in New York state Supreme Court. In a terse statement, WPP said its Lord, Geller, Federico, Einstein agency, Lord Einstein and Young & Rubicam, which owns 49% of Lord Einstein, agreed to drop all claims. "The settlement does not suggest admission of wrongdoing by any of the parties and is intended to avoid the expense and distraction that would accompany continued litigation," the statement said.

Philip Reiss, an attorney for WPP and Lord Geller, said he was "very pleased" with the settlement but declined to comment further. Under the out-of-court settlement, the parties aren't allowed to discuss or reveal exact terms of the deal, such as whether Lord Einstein can now solicit clients or employees of Lord Geller. The case stemmed from the March 18, 1988, walkout by six top Lord Geller executives, who left to form Lord Einstein. Lord Einstein subsequently hired 60 Lord Geller employees and was awarded two Lord Geller accounts.

Saatchi surge

Stock soars; takeover rumors fly

By Laurel Wentz and Gary Levin

As Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s stock price soared Friday, contradictory rumors had the London-based company facing increased investment by a U.S. financial institution and/or an imminent takeover bid.

On Friday, 10.2 million shares —or about 6% of the company's outstanding common stock—were traded in London, where Saatchi shares closed at 342 pence, up from 300 pence at the start of the trading day. In New York Stock Exchange trading, Saatchi closed at $17.25, up $2.13.

A Saatchi executive said the company wouldn't comment on price-sensitive information.

For a few hours, the financial community was on the alert for a takeover bid for Saatchi from Adia, a Lucerne, Switzerland-based recruitment services group, reportedly considering a 375 pence-per-share bid.

Analysts said Adia is interested in expanding in the business services sector. Earlier this year, the company bought Inspectorate, a London-based service company dealing with inspections and security control and personnel. In the U.S., Adia owns Tempworld and Comp-u-staff temporary-help companies.

No bid materialized before the London and New York markets closed, and analysts familiar with Adia said the Swiss company had looked over Saatchi's consulting companies, up for sale since June, and decided not to buy any of them (see related story on Page 40). Adia officials couldn't be reached for comment.

Another scenario: Memphis, Tenn.-based Southeastern Asset Management, an investment house, was increasing the 10.2% stake it took in Saatchi last month, said Chris Akers, an analyst at Citicorp Scrimgeour Vickers.

Southeastern Chairman Mason Hawkins said he had no comment on speculation his company had increased its Saatchi holdings. "Public filing will have to answer that question," he said. Southeastern is Saatchi's largest shareholder. The company has maintained it's increased its Saatchi shares as an investment.

Old reports also resurfaced: a possible takeover bid by Dentsu, Tokyo; a management-led buyout of Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide, New York, by Backer Chairman Carl Spielvogel, backed by Prudential Bache Securities, and "greenmail" by Robert Jacoby, the former chairman of Ted Bates Worldwide.

Mr. Jacoby, who was ousted shortly after Saatchi acquired Bates in 1986, said he hadn't purchased any Saatchi shares recently. In fact, he said, he sold his stake of 300,000 Saatchi American Depositary Receipts last month at $15.75 each. He said he bought them in March at $14.50, so the sale earned him a $375,000 profit.

WPP Group chief executive and Saatchi archrival Martin Sorrell, asked whether he was interested in any Saatchi properties, said, "I have my own organization to run."

At least eight rumors were circulating in London on Friday afternoon, and Mr. Akers predicted the least likely was an Adia bid.

Andrew Wallach, analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert, said, "I think it could happen eventually, but it's unlikely right now, at least until they square away their consulting sale." □

Mountain Dew sports new rival to Gatorade

By Patricia Winters

Pepsi-Cola Co. is going after Gatorade.

The soft drink giant is testing new Mountain Dew Sport, positioned against the longtime sports-drink leader from Quaker Oats Co.

Mountain Dew Sport, introduced in Eau Claire and Menomonie, Wis., two weeks ago, is a low-carbonated drink with sodium, potassium and chloride, ingredients that restore body fluids lost during and after sports-related activities. It also contains vitamin C.

The product comes in yellow-and-white 16-ounce bottles and cans priced competitively with soft drinks at 59¢. A wide-mouth 32-ounce bottle, mimicking one of Gatorade's packages, retails for 95¢, comparably priced with the leader.

Diet and regular versions are offered.

"We're always looking for opportunities, and research shows there is a growing market for sports-oriented beverages," said Jeffrey Brown, manager-public relations at Pepsi. "It's designed for quick refreshment during and immediately after activities but not just sports and exercise activities. It's also refreshment related to activities such as mowing the lawn."

Pepsi is putting heavy ad support behind the test, including TV, radio, outdoor boards, page newspaper ads, coupons, direct mail and point of purchase.

A catalog, offering reduced prices on merchandise with Mountain Dew Sport proofs-of-purchase, was sent to 100,000 households in the test areas.

Ad spending is at a national rate equivalent to between $10 million and $20 million, trade sources say. Quaker spent $26 million on Gatorade in national measured media last year.

Mountain Dew Sport advertising, from BBDO Worldwide, New York, relies on Pepsi's underdog style by subtly taking a jab at Gatorade without mentioning its name.

"It's designed for quick refreshment during and immediately after activities but not just sports and exercise activities."

The TV spot, filmed in Giants Stadium, uses actors as football players at the end of a winning game. The players lift a huge barrel of Moutain Dew Sport, ready to dump it on the coach's head. Suddenly everyone stops, and a voice-over says, "Tastes so good you won't want to spill a drop."

Gatorade gained national publicity when New York Giants players poured the product on coach Bill Parcells' head during its 1986-87 championship season.

The Mountain Dew Sport spot, themed "Go for it," was directed by Bianchi Films.

Pepsi's test of Mountain Dew Sport demonstrates the company's desire to expand volume by targeting beverage niches.

In a spurt of new-product activity, Pepsi also is testing in Cleveland Pepsi A.M., an increased caffeine product aimed at morning consumption. It's also testing a sparkling water line called H2Oh!.

Pepsi appears to be trying to expand its shelf space beyond the soft-drink aisle in supermarkets. While Mountain Dew Sport is sold next to soft drinks, the product also is in the juice aisle where Gatorade is sold.

The new product has a tough game ahead. Gatorade is the only national competitor, and it's proved so far to be unconquerable.

With $350 million in sales in 1988, Gatorade has been growing 30% annually and owns from 90% to 95% of the sport drink "isotonic" market.

Earlier in the decade, Coca-Cola Foods made an unsuccessful effort with a product called Max. Max, however, was distributed through warehouses, and Pepsi is using its bottler system.

Trade sources say Coca-Cola continues to eye the Gatorade franchise. Coca-Cola markets Sports Aquarius, a sports drink sold by Coca-Cola bottlers in Japan, where it's been very successful.

Rumors have circulated that it's planning a U.S. launch of Sports Aquarius, but Coca-Cola in the past has denied such a move.

Pepsi didn't say how long Mountain Dew Sport will test. Eau Claire is a BehaviorScan test market of Information Resources Inc., possibly one reason Pepsi chose the site, an industry source speculated. □

Reeling retailers

Sales of chains could bring 'chaos'

By Judith Graham

Chicago's "Magnificent Mile," lined with tony merchants, has long symbolized the reign of department stores at the pinnacle of the retail industry.

Today, however, it symbolizes the extraordinary turmoil in that segment of the business.

Consider but a few of the merchants located within blocks of each other on Michigan Avenue:

- Bloomingdale's: up for sale by financially troubled Campeau Corp.
- Bonwit Teller: forced into Chapter 11 reorganization bankruptcy proceedings with parent L.J. Hooker Corp.
- Marshall Field's and Saks Fifth Avenue: up for sale by parent BAT Industries, under threat of a $21.1 billion takeover bid by Sir James Goldsmith.
- I. Magnin & Co.: sold last year to R.H. Macy & Co., whose separate bidding contest for Federated Department Stores helped drive up Federated's price for ultimate victor Campeau.

The long-term implications of this upheaval—for the chains, their competitors, media and manufacturers—are tremendous, retail industry experts say.

"The events in retailing in the last four months have probably been more turbulent than in the past 20 years," said Erich Linker, senior VP-advertising at The New York Times. "It's a concern because the normal course of business is being interrupted."

"For the short term, at least through the end of the holidays, it's going to be business as usual. But what's likely to happen after that, when sales of retail chains are actually consummated—it's going to be chaos," said Harry Bernard, exec VP at Colton Bernard Inc., an apparel consulting company.

Experts say the likely long-term results of the changes include a restructuring of supplier-retailer relationships as manufacturers seek to protect themselves against potential retail failures.

"What this entire situation is doing is causing pause on the part of manufacturers and leading them to explore other options," said William Flatley, principal, Kurt Salmon Associates.

Among the alternatives being considered, industry experts say, are more manufacturer-operated retail stores, more manufacturer control in the department store setting and the development of lists of "preferred" retailers, to which manufacturers will throw more business.

"Vendors are asking themselves, 'What stores do I really believe are going to be here and which should I support?' " Mr. Bernard said.

Experts agree smaller manufacturers that lack a strong consumer franchise or clout with store buyers are most vulnerable to the retail upheaval. But even powerful suppliers, faced with the disruption of important distribution channels, could be hurt.

"Our reservations have to do . . . with next spring. We feel the effects could be more long term than short term," said one executive at Giorgio Beverly Hills.

Another long-term effect could be a further erosion in market share for some department stores, whose managements will be distracted by financial concerns.

"I simply don't think they can afford to take advantage of the strengths they have as the grand emporiums, the fashion authorities. They've got to worry too much about cash flow, day in and day out," said Daniel Sweeney, chairman of Management Horizons, a retail consultancy.

Opportunities will increase for well-financed, focused competitors to make inroads.

Among the names most frequently mentioned by sources: Dillard Department Stores, Nordstrom's, May Department Stores Co. and The Limited.

There will also be cutbacks in staffing for in-house retail advertising and promotion departments.

P.A. Bergner & Co. earlier this year acquired Carson Pirie Scott & Co., and "now all the advertising and promotion is done out of Milwaukee," where Bergner is located, said a former retail executive who asked not to be identified. Buckingham Cioffi & Associates, Toronto, had handled TV for Chicago-based Carson's.

There probably will be a shift away from image to more price-item advertising and a closer evaluation of in-store programs as well as external media.

"Whatever doesn't immediately

Outdoor faces its flaws

Measuring bureaus mend fences to push medium forward

By Alan Radding

The 10-year skirmish to keep the upstart out is over.

After ignoring and attempting to discourage the Out-of-Home Measurement Bureau and its 8-sheet focus, the Traffic Audit Bureau—the big boards' auditing service—has approved a 1990 joining of the two organizations.

The restructured organization will embark on an overdue expansion program designed to benefit the entire outdoor medium by providing advertisers more reliable numbers on more out-of-home media.

The two bureaus, to become the Traffic Audit Bureau for Media Measurement effective Jan. 1, will measure all out-of-home vehicles—from in-store media to aerial banners—and the number of people who observe them. "There are a lot of [new out-of-home] formats out there, and no one knows where to go with them," says Kenneth Sammon, TAB president.

"The OMB has already started to audit bus shelters, and [the new TAB] will go along with it," says Julian Sloan, OMB executive director and exec VP of the combined bureau.

"We'll consider anything that should be measured," says John Meskil, TAB chairman and exec VP-media, Warwick Baker & Fiore, New York.

The two organizations essentially perform the same function. They audit the number of vehicles passing a given board and produce a circulation figure for that location.

TAB audits painted bulletins and 30-sheet poster panels; OMB audits newer and smaller formats—primarily 8-sheet posters and transit shelters.

Previously, TAB members presented the primary obstacle to the organizations' merger, says Mr. Sloan, who helped launch OMB when TAB wouldn't audit 8-sheet.

The older outdoor companies perceived 8-sheet advertising to be an upstart competitor, he says. They refused to audit the 8-sheet format because they didn't want to validate a rival.

Over the years, hard-line TAB members retired, sold their companies or were converted and a new generation of outdoor media executives arrived with aggressive plans to expand the scope of outdoor.

"They look at outdoor and want to expand the club. And now, most of them have 8-sheets," says Mr. Sloan. For example, the 10 largest outdoor companies have 8-sheet boards.

"The change was buyer driven," says Mr. Meskil. "Most of the buyers in the industry were using both [30-sheets and 8-sheets] so why should they have to go to two different organizations for the same thing?"

The last resistance crumbled in the face of a complex plan that restructures TAB to incorporate the 8-sheet industry and most other out-of-home formats while preserving each organization's autonomy until new measurement systems are in place in about two years. "All the OMB people have an important role," Mr. Meskil says.

According to Mr. Sloan, when OMB was forming 10 years ago, "I thought it was inevitable that they would merge. It only makes sense to have one organization." □

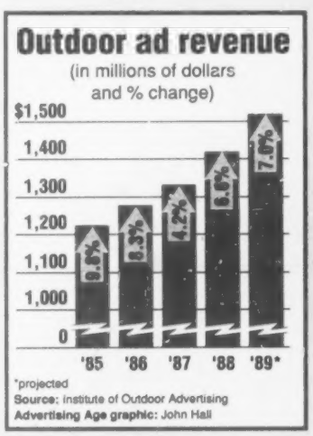
BAROMETER

Take a number



Take the pulse

In concept, outdoor is for everybody. In reality, it's a commuter's medium. Barometer rides into town from the outskirts, casting a jaundiced eye on the media encountered.

Transit stations...Location, location, location. In genteel suburbs, graffiti artists still work on easels. But the average lifespan of a board in subway stations is a day, tops.

Bus posters...They stand out in a crowd. But when winter hits the Snow Belt, your name is mud.

Subway cards...Seriously underutilized by serious advertisers. Where do your eyes go when you're ignoring the drunk swaying from the strap?

Big boards...There's not much else to look at during rush hour. But they're less imposing at 55 mph.

Bus shelters...Considering most cities' transit system performance, these redefine the meaning of captive audience.

Taxi signage...Guilt by association. Nobody wants to buy a product riding shotgun on the vehicle that almost ran them over.

Companies pump up their images

Reebok International jumped into out-of-home advertising in a big way last month.

The shoe manufacturer contracted Technique Mirage to flash a bigger-than-life image of its new Pump athletic shoe across building facades in Chicago.

Atlanta-based Technique Mirage uses the brightest projectors available to project images up to 200 feet tall on buildings, mountains, giant screens and even smoke.

Researchers making a new impression

Outdated system to determine consumer exposure gets revamp

By Alan Radding

The "less-is-more" concept has another convert.

New outdoor research from the Traffic Audit Bureau is expected to address advertiser concern that auditing numbers generated by the current methodology are inflated.

"Smaller numbers should increase our credibility," says Andrew Weitzer, VP-media and research for Gannett Outdoor Group.

Under the current system the gross exposure figures—the number of people that pass an out-of-home ad and how often they pass it—are high and the resulting costs per thousand are low.

"The current system of evaluating exposure is recognized as being outdated due to increased auto ownership and lifestyle change," says Ken Sammon, president of TAB.

"Therefore the industry is fielding national reseach to pinpoint vehicle occupancy by market and by region—New Yorkers usually have full cars, and people in Los Angeles drive alone," he says.

Instead of one load factor—an accepted figure for the average number of passengers per vehicle—several regional load factors may be determined from the surveys to be undertaken by Simmons Market Research Bureau, Mediamark Research and TAB. The test will take place in late fall.

The load factor has been 1.75 people per vehicle since the early 1970s.

"Maybe it was OK during the oil crisis in the early 1970s when lots of people were carpooling, but it isn't OK anymore," Mr. Weitzer says.

Until the research is complete, "A load factor guesstimate is about 1.5 people for a national average for all driving, for all purposes, every day of the week," says Mr. Sammon.

Mr. Weitzer expects some complaints from the industry about the estimated 20% smaller audience figures that will result from the altered load factors.

However, many say the industry must improve its research to encourage greater advertising. There is always a suspicion that the data for outdoor advertising is not accurate, says Richard Olsen, vice chairman of Vitt Media International.

"Outdoor is using vague industry estimates [on general traffic and research], while advertisers are getting more scientific every day," he says.

"They haven't come up with a lot of new research in a long time, so anything new is welcome to us," says Mr. Olsen.

Some buyers remain skeptical.

Bob Warrens, senior VP-director of media resources and research at J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago, says, "It still isn't going to get us reliable reach for a specific buy or location.

"We're just going around the block to make inferences, although maybe it will give us a little better handle on audience composition," he says.

The new system to quantify reach and frequency will replace Audience Measurement by Market for Outdoor and has been approved by the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers.

"The whole thing is based on the miles traveled and puts a ceiling on reach," says Mr. Weitzer. The new system requires audiences be surveyed by field tests to ascertain how many urban miles individuals drive in a week and in a month. By excluding non-drivers, reach will never be 100% of the market, although frequency will continue to build as in the past.

Once the survey responses are collected in a national data base, the outdoor companies will be able to provide verifiable reach and frequency estimates for various demographic groups based on the percentage of urban miles driven by a particular group.

Some major outdoor advertisers are skeptical of any attempt to segment the medium by demographics.

"You don't really want to target women 18-49 with outdoor. Everybody uses the same roads," says Richard Dilworth, manager, out-of-home operations for RJR Media Services.

The objective is that outdoor be accurately quantified in the same way as other media, Mr. Weitzer says. "Our goal is to try to get outdoor on the computer in every agency with all the data, even pricing, so agencies can do reach and frequency and CPM comparisons."

Mr. Dilworth considers performance auditing the most important new research technique. The system, being tested by Gannett, through TAB, will rely on spot checks by independent auditors to determine whether the proper poster was at the right location at the right time.

"It's no different from the systems that check whether broadcast spots ran when they were supposed to," Mr. Dilworth says.

TAB expects the system to go into full operation in a couple years.

TAB is currently in four major markets monitoring outdoor performance that provides an electronic report on when and where the advertising appears.

Replacing the space position value rating will be a new location rating system based on a more detailed index—the New 4As Outdoor Visibility Rating System—that attempts to quantify a board's impact based on seconds of visibility. It gives credit for structural improvements, the location's visibility and proximity to other boards.

"There has been a lot of [reconstruction] in the industry and the new system will reflect this," says Mr. Dilworth.

Some operators are suspicious of the new location rating system. They fear it could lead to per-location pricing instead of the current unit rate pricing.

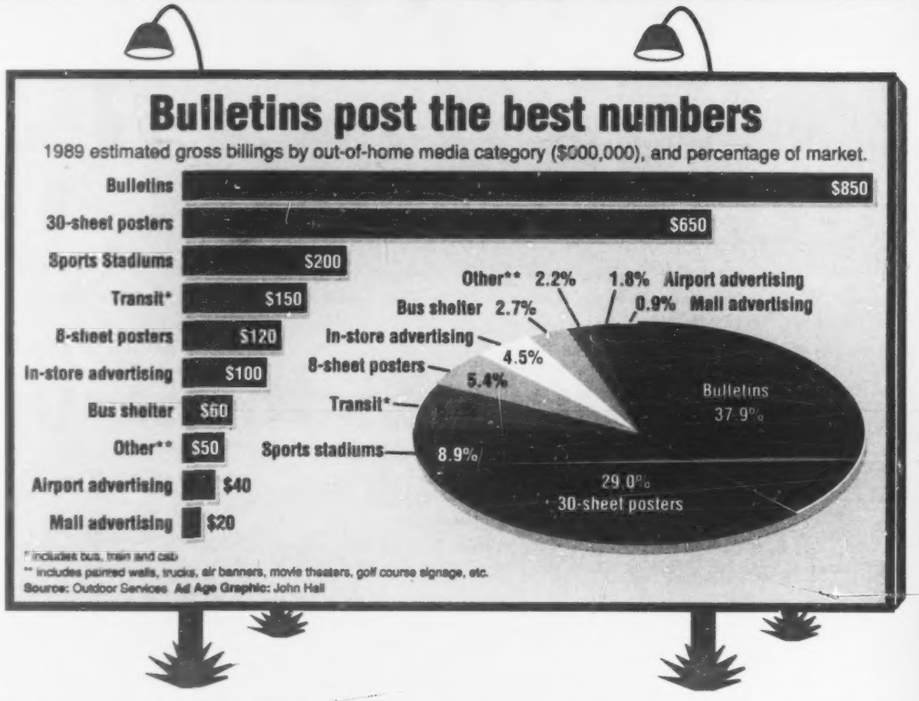
"The viewing time could be a problem," says one source close to 8-sheet operators. The system's variables might penalize smaller out-of-home formats.

The newly combined TAB and the Out-of-Home Measurement Bureau is upgrading and expanding its outdoor research quality. It will audit circulation figures for previously unaudited forms of out-of-home advertising such as transit, malls, in-store media, aerial displays, trucks, bench ads, ski tows, phone kiosks, grocery store displays, taxi backlights, professional sports stadiums/arenas and a variety of other new forms.

In addition, individual outdoor companies are launching their own research initiatives.

In Baltimore, Penn Advertising is testing an interactive communications unit that provides traffic figures, performance auditing and plant monitoring in a computerized remote-control package attached to the back of the board.

The new system notifies the outdoor company when illumination is failing, provides proof of performance through bar code scanning and can transmit traffic data by interfacing with automated traffic counting devices. □



Buffaloed into believing

Boards follow courtship; happy ending for pub

By Scott Hume

What can you create with one outdoor board and a $20,000 ad budget?

A fairy tale. And very high recall.

Crowley, Webb & Associates, Buffalo, N.Y., created both for local tavern Garcia's Irish Pub earlier this year, using an imaginative series of boards that had people talking and wondering.

The saga began April 17 when a board by a downtown expressway carried this message: "Angel in Red: Saw you at Garcia's Irish Pub. Love to meet you. William."

A week later the board carried a new message: "Angel in Red: Still waiting. Garcia's Pub, Friday? William." And the next week yet another: "Angel in Red: I'm going broke with these billboards. Garcia's . . . please. William."

During the fourth week, this response appeared: "Hey Willie, I'm no angel, but I do wear red. Garcia's Saturday. Candi."

The "real" Angel didn't respond until the eighth week—"Dear William. I must be crazy. Garcia's, Friday, 8:30. 'Angel.' "—after which the two star-crossed lovers finally got together. The series ended a week later with this final message: "Angel: Thanks for Friday at Garcia's. I'm in heaven. William."

William searching for "Angel in red," story ends in heaven with fame and riches for Garcia's.

What that synopsis leaves out is the amount of impact the campaign had while it ran. Suddenly, all of Buffalo wanted to know about "William" and the "Angel in Red."

"It took on a life of its own," says Joseph Crowley, the agency's president. "There was so much talk about that board that we arranged with a local radio station to do an interview with 'William' on Wednesday afternoons and Friday mornings" in addition to running Garcia's commercials on the station.

Paul Cotter, the campaign's copywriter, earned the right to portray William during the radio interviews/ads.

There was plenty of "free media" keeping the campaign alive, too. Local TV stations did news features on it. A local newspaper columnist devoted one day's column to the "relationship" between William and

OAI putting together net to make buying overseas easier

By Alison Fahey

Worldwide outdoor media buys are now only a phone call away.

London-based Outdoor Advertising International, formed last month, has seven affiliates on three continents, allowing marketers to buy out-of-home space around the world through one company.

In the process, the company hopes to address some problems confronting advertisers that want to place out-of-home ads overseas.

"It's a troublesome area, buying outdoor overseas," says Pete Riordan, VP and out-of-home media manager at BBDO Worldwide, New York.

"It's time consuming [for an ad agency to locate and purchase] outdoor on its own," says Joanne Wayne, VP-associate media director, Grey Advertising, New York.

Furthermore, outdoor has long taken a back seat to other media, resulting in many agencies not developing expertise in buying space as easily as, for example, they would with magazines.

The joint-venture partners, comprised of outdoor advertising companies, sales representatives and media buying specialists, buy out-of-home space for members' clients in their respective countries. OAI assigns the buys to the appropriate affiliates; included is information on the client budget and target market.

This is how the system works: if a U.S. marketer wants to run an outdoor campaign in France it would contact the OAI rep in the U.S., which would then contact OAI. The group would direct Comecon, OAI's affiliate in France, to evaluate and make the buy.

The process will enable advertisers to get "better value" for their out-of-home placements because outdoor specialists in each country will make the buys, says Nick Beck, OAI's managing director.

"I can see that [OAI could make better buys than agencies]," says Ms. Wayne. "We're not a tremendous outdoor shop, we don't claim to have that expertise . . . I could see using it," she adds.

Grey now uses an outdoor sales rep, National Out-of-Home Media Services, to make outdoor buys across the U.S.

But advertisers shouldn't expect to get a lower price on outdoor space by using OAI instead of an agency, Mr. Beck says.

"In no case will OAI business be done on any basis besides impact. [Advertisers] may not get the cheapest site but they will get more [value]," he says.

Mr. Beck says OAI will offer the larger ad agencies a portion of the revenues derived from referred business. In that scenario, revenues are divided among the participating joint-venture partners or the ad agency and OAI.

"This is going to return money to the ad agencies that they never had before," says Mr. Beck.

OAI's joint venture partners include: National Out-of-Home Media Sales (U.S.); Marsh & Partners (London); Comecon (Paris); TDI (Hong Kong); Ginza (Barcelona); Pearl & Dean Caribbean (Trinidad); and David Copp Sports Media (London).

OAI is working on joint-venture relationships in Singapore and Japan, and the company also hopes to sign five more European partners by yearend.

OAI's 1990 rollout plans include Moscow, Rio de Janeiro and Australia. The consortium will buy space directly from outdoor companies in countries where it lacks representation, Mr. Beck says.

Angel. For Garcia's, its awareness and traffic both improved, he says.

"One reason this was so effective is that it had a fairy tale aspect to it," Mr. Crowley says. "Seeing somebody attractive and then later wishing you'd met, that's something I think a lot of people related to, so they watched the boards.

"Also, these boards didn't really look like professional ones, so many people had no idea this was really an ad campaign," he says. "We knew that when we pitched another piece of business and we talked about what we'd done with the Garcia's campaign. One of the execs turned to the other and said, 'My God. I told you that was an ad campaign.' "

Adding to the believability was the appearance of the campaign on just one board on the highway leading to Garcia's.

"It was a strategically placed board, certainly, but it was just one, so people had to go out of their way sometimes to find out the latest in the search for 'Angel,' " Mr. Crowley says. "That helped keep interest going."

The campaign was planned as a weekly series from the beginning. But reaction was so strong the agency trimmed the plan to nine different boards from 12.

The complete "Angel in red" campaign for Garcia's, including the arranged radio interviews, cost about $20,000. □

Prices hold steady despite mergers

Traditional structures have been clearly limited by anti-clutter forces, resulting in higher values for the ones that remain

By Alan Radding

There are two ways to expand an outdoor advertising company: buy another outdoor company or move into new out-of-home formats.

Industry experts agree that the ability to grow by putting up boards in new locations is limited.

The Highway Beautification Act of 1965 marked the turning point when traditional boards started coming down in greater numbers than they were going up. The outdoor industry responded by moving into new forms of out-of-home advertising.

"You have to expand your thinking [to other forms]," says Don Davidson, president-ceo of Gannett Outdoor Group. "Everyone thought they were in the billboard business. They couldn't see being in other types of out-of-home."

Today, there are about 500,000 traditional outdoor structures—painted bulletins, 30-sheets and 8-sheets—down from a peak of 1.2 million in 1965. Other out-of-home advertising faces include those on 35,000 buses, 13,000 commuter cars, 13,000 shopping-mall kiosks, 15,000 bus shelters and 13,000 grocery store displays.

Opposition from environmental groups and local governments makes it unlikely that the number of traditional structures will increase significantly.

The economics of the outdoor industry suggest the outdoor boards in existence today will become increasingly valuable as limited supply, increased demand and high profit margins continue, suggests William McCluskey, managing director of Henry Ansbacher Inc., a New York investment firm.

Outdoor's assets are not lost on other Wall Street financiers and investment bankers.

plants. There is a finite number [of outdoor boards] in each market," says Dennis Brush, managing director of Lepercq de Neuflize & Co., a New York investment firm specializing in media with an emphasis on out-of-home.

Speaking to the financial community, Martin Pompadur, a founder of ML Media Partners, a joint venture with Merrill Lynch Capital Markets, says, "It's novel. It's an industry in need of professional marketing and sales and research.

"It's not labor intensive. It is not a state-of-the-art business. Revenue outpaces inflation. Profit margins are indecent at 40% to 45%. There are no inventories to go bad and receivables are not a problem," he says.

"Advertisers are turning to outdoor. It has the lowest cost-per-thousand and it is very regional, localized, which is something that advertisers want," says Mr. McCluskey.

Outdoor advertisers are concerned about board location, traffic count and whether or not it's audited, says Richard Olsen, vice chairman of Vitt Media International. "They don't care whose [outdoor board] it is."

However, outdoor has a credibility problem, he says, adding "large companies may bring a better sense of credibility to the industry."

Advertisers probably aren't aware of the merger activity in outdoor and it wouldn't make a difference if they were, says Mike McMichael, VP-manager out-of-home media at J. Walter Thompson USA, Chicago.

Marketers are interested in price changes, and "we haven't seen any," says Mr. McMichael. "I can't believe there would be much price impact [caused by mergers]. Usually competitive pressure keeps prices in line."

JWT estimates that outdoor prices increased 5% in 1988 and 7% this year and will move up only 5% next year. The largest recent increase in outdoor pricing came in 1985, a year of sharp media inflation, when prices jumped 9%.

From a financier's point-of-view, out-of-home economics create a strong cash flow that can support heavy debt. This realization led to the recent surge of leveraged acquisitions.

> "Outdoor has the lowest cost-per-thousand and it is very regional, localized, which is something that advertisers want."

According to Lepercq, the volume of mergers and acquisitions in outdoor companies rose from about $35 million in 1982 to a peak of $874 million in 1986 when Patrick Media acquired Foster & Kleiser in a highly leveraged $710 million deal that is unraveling, says Mr. Brush. In the past two years, total outdoor acquisitions have run about $180 million or more.

The average purchase price is generally small—under $10 million—because most outdoor companies continue to be local or regional operations.

Bankers expect mergers in the outdoor industry to remain high. With about 295 plants (or 125 outdoor companies) in the Outdoor Advertising Association of America and about another 50 non-OAAA member plants, it is clear plenty of targets remain.

But don't expect to see many mega-mergers, advises Don Byer, president of the Institute of Outdoor Advertising.

"Even the big companies realize that they are local plants," he says.

However, spurred by investment bankers, out-of-home is changing. "The perception is that outdoor is old," says Mr. Byer, "but in reality, it is [made up of] young, modern, media and advertising people. □

PEOPLE TO WATCH

Outdoor gets a bum rap in New York, says Herbert W. "Woody" Swain, Jr.

Unlike Los Angeles, where outdoor boards are considered an art form, print and TV get all the attention east of the Hudson, says the VP-creative supervisor at Young & Rubicam, New York. "Outdoor is not top-of-mind with people [in New York]," says Mr. Swain, who has won awards for two of the outdoor boards he designed.

"We're at a disadvantage for assessing outdoor because, except for bus shelters, we're sort of immune to what's going on out there."

Two outdoor advertising projects that landed on his desk wound up award winners. A transit poster for the United Negro College Fund earned him a Communication Excellence to Black Audiences Award in 1988; last spring he scored his first Obie Award for Colgate toothpaste.

"In today's world, the language has become the barrier," say Lynn Steck, national creative director at Patrick Media Group. "Woody's work represents the first piece of creative from the package goods side that truly integrates the concept and visual for a wordless communication."

The image of a smiling face, with plain black strokes for the eyes and nose, and the mouth drawn as a smile-line of toothpaste from the Colgate tube projects a "childlike simplicity," says Mr. Swain. The tag line is "The wise choice."

Outdoor board for Colgate toothpaste gives Mr. Swain his first OBIE Award.

One of the biggest creative challenges for an art director, he says, "is to make sure what you've put on that billboard, when it's blown up, will be right. It's pretty scary when you think about it because that's you up there."

Out-of-home advertising "can be the most creative medium" because there's only the art director and the writer involved in the project, Mr. Swain says.

"It's just you and a piece of paper. You can put whatever you want on it and it'll be seen by thousands of people in a minute. It's a real challenge."

Fake product proves to be more than passing fancy

Bogus Mediacom campaign generates real numbers for transit shelter ads

By Pat Gray Thomas

Cute as a thimble, it's a Kimble."

"You'll bless the day you bought a Kimble."

"He who is nimble is quick to buy a Kimble."

What is a "Kimble?" A product that wasn't.

A "Kimble" was a fictitious product created by Mediacom, Canada's giant outdoor advertising company. The ad slogans mentioned above were on the teaser posters placed in transit shelters to test the medium's effectiveness.

The campaign was created by then-staffers at Mediacom agency Miller Myers, Bruce DallaCosta, Toronto. Art Director Tony Kerr is now at Ambrose Carr Linton Kelly, Toronto; Copywriter Bruce MacDonald now works for Ryan MacDonald Edwards, Toronto.

The six-week campaign started in January when the first teaser ad—"Cute as a thimble, it's a Kimble"—appeared in transit shelters in Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal.

During the fifth and sixth weeks of the Kimble campaign—when "He who is nimble . . ." was posted—200 Toronto residents were randomly selected and interviewed in-home by Canadian Facts, an independent research company.

In response to one of the questions—"What is it?"—respondents and thousands of curious callers, guessed Kimbles might be sunglasses, jewelry, snack food, toothpaste, gum and a washing machine; the most popular answers were clothes, shoes and furs.

The study found 84% of respondents agreed transit shelter advertising is "enjoyable," while 85% said it was "interesting" and 75% described it as "informative." When asked to describe any transit shelter ad seen in the last four months without prompting, 4% repeated the ad message or described one of the three Kimble posters.

This is particularly unusual, says Rosanne Caror, VP-research at Mediacom, ". . . considering there was no brand or service and no one had heard of a Kimble prior to our promotion."

When shown a photo with the Kimble name masked, 26% of respondents recalled seeing the poster and 41% of that group could identify Kimble as the product name; 1% could recall the ads when shown complete pictures of the campaign.

After four weeks, 31% of all respondents were aware of the Kimble campaign.

Teens were particularly interested in identifying a Kimble: 86% of 12-to-17-year-olds said they were "very interested" or "somewhat interested" in finding out what one was. Only 46% of 18-to-24-year-olds, 37% of 25-to-49-year-olds, and 31% of those 50-plus showed similar interest.

The effort supplied Mediacom with statistics supporting transit shelter advertising, which it used in a 3,000-piece direct mailing to advertisers and agencies.

"One advertiser asked if we had sent a promotional piece to his ad agency," says Yvonne McKinnon, Mediacom VP-advertising and promotions. The advertiser told her, "The agency keeps turning us away from outdoor, and I want them to see this." □

With ads like this, it's no wonder Toronto residents thought the fictitious Kimble was a sunglasses brand.

Mediacom's fake campaign delivered the desired result when a survey said 83% found it "interesting."

Outdoor 'can't have it both ways,' cities say

As national curbs cool, the battle is shifting to local level and a tricky question: How much is a board worth?

By Steven W. Colford

A federal court in Gainesville, Fla. last month paved the way for the local government to come up with a formula that would determine the value of an outdoor board, both for taxation and compensation.

By refusing a request by Peterson Outdoor, Ocala, Fla., to dismiss a longstanding lawsuit, the court, in effect, backed the right of a local government to remove outdoor boards for a price, according to Penny Wheat, commissioner in the surrounding Alachua County.

And price—or more specifically, value—is the heart of an increasing number of disputes between outdoor companies and local governments searching for additional revenue sources.

Gainesville and Jacksonville, Fla.; Raleigh, N.C.; and St. Louis are some of the sites where the same questions are being asked of out-of-home companies that pay considerably less in taxes on a board than what they say it is worth when the local government wants to remove it.

Stop the presses!

As this Special Report was going to press last Wednesday, legislation was introduced by Rep. John Lewis, (D., Ga.) to freeze the number of outdoor boards placed along federal highways and to allow the federal government to remove any nonconforming boards remaining after Oct. 1, 1994.

"Peterson has 120 boards outside Gainesville and last year paid $1,400 in taxes on all of them," Ms. Wheat says.

"But when we want to take a sign down, they say it's worth $100,000. Well, they can't have it both ways."

The spreading debate over an outdoor board's value has created another outdoor industry foe—one not necessarily motivated by anti-outdoor-board fervor as are previous opponents.

But the end-result is identical: more pressure on the industry.

The increased activity at the local level comes as the Outdoor Advertising Association of America's new president, Roland McElroy, sees anti-outdoor-board sentiment in Congress abating.

In fact, Mr. McElroy believes OAAA might convince Congress the outdoor industry deserves a further break in two years. That's the next time Congress will have an opportunity to alter the Highway Beautification Act of 1965 that controls outdoor boards along federal roads.

"The HBA has worked and worked very well," says Mr. McElroy.

"About 700,000 signs, illegal and nonconforming, have come down since it was passed.

"We feel the Fifth Amendment position regarding just compensation for the taking [down] of boards should be respected and strengthened, and that is under

Outdoor cost-effectiveness is based on local coverage capabilities, and the fact is: some of the best Outdoor markets are not among the biggest. Between Sunset Strip and Times Square, there are real Outdoor opportunities.

PENN ADVERTISING markets are, quite simply, great Outdoor markets. Balanced, total coverage and geodemographic targeting are well within Penn's service capabilities. And nowhere else will you find better test markets* for your Northeast Regional product rollouts.

From a small Outdoor company founded in 1920 in York, PA, Penn Advertising has grown regionally to meet clients' needs. Today, Penn maintains nearly 8,000 standardized displays—30-sheet & 8-Sheet Poster Panels, Painted & Superflex Bulletins . . . back-illuminated displays & kiosks in retail shopping malls.

PENN PEOPLE are advertising professionals who know Outdoor. And they know these markets—every neighborhood, street & highway—where people work and where they buy. At Penn Advertising, account service means more than contracts and proof-of-performance. It includes marketing research and creative support, production quality control, and attention to detail.

Outdoor versus cities

discussion" within OAAA, he says. "We'd be satisfied with the status quo ... but would like to look for ways to strengthen the process, but we don't have any deep legislative strategy on that right now."

Although Scenic America, an anti-outdoor lobbying group,

> "There has been some nibbling and nipping away by local governments. But generally the states and cities have not been successful."

thinks Congress is averse to further regulation of boards, it also believes trouble for the industry is surfacing on the state and local levels.

"There's not a lot of prospect for any change at the federal level," says Ed McMahon, Scenic America's executive director. "But I think what you're seeing, especially at the state and local levels, is an increased effort to make the billboard industry pay its fair share of taxes, and I think it's in that area that you'll see [more] regulation," he says.

Non-federal battle grounds are active, concedes Mr. McElroy.

"There's been a battle over signs at every [governmental] level, though it's hard to say if it's any more now than in the past," he says.

Mr. McElroy is more immediately concerned with possible legislation that targets all advertising, not just the outdoor medium. Foremost among Mr. McElroy's fears is that Congress will try to disallow some of the deductibility of advertising, whether across the board or just for alcohol and tobacco ads.

"I really don't think ad tax legislation has a chance, but it's just an example of how Congress next year will be looking for any new source of revenue it can find," he says.

"I think 1990 will be a watershed year for the Congress ... which will make every effort to find revenue. And if the economy is strong, that will increase chances they will try to get revenue from any number of sources, whether an ad tax, an excise tax or what have you. On the other hand, if there is a recession, they won't look at anything."

However, one upshot of possible ad-tax legislation might benefit the outdoor industry, which is among the least expensive media and therefore not likely to be cut from media plans, says Mr. McElroy.

Other legislation that has Mr. McElroy's attention is a bill from Rep. Tom Luken (D., Ohio) to ban imagery from all tobacco advertising. Because of proposed limits on type-size and color, Mr. McElroy says, a cigarette pack on a full-size outdoor board would appear to a passerby as about the size of a sugar cube.

Peter Riordan, VP-out-of-home manager, BBDO Worldwide, New York, sees little change in the regulatory environment.

"There are sporadic attempts by [congressional] committees to violate the federal standard for compensation through one gimmick or another. And there's been some nibbling and nipping away by local governments. But generally the states and cities have not been successful."

Scenic America's Mr. McMahon disagrees. "Many billboard companies don't pay property taxes, or when they do, it's based on old values, where they might report the value of a board at $100 when its market value [based on local property values] is in the thousands," he says.

Mr. McElroy's primary concern is that the activity remain on the local level and not spread to Congress, where outdoor is being viewed in a more positive light than it has for years. "I think the outdoor industry has received a bum rap in the last 10 to 15 years," he says. □

The boards that make Milwaukee famous

Well, maybe not quite, but strategic Koss sign has kept area commuters smiling for 17 years

Playing off the biblical story of Noah and the ark, a popular Koss board used the copy, "Noah's favorite pair."

By Pat Gray Thomas

Eye-catching, smile Koss-ing outdoor advertising for audio equipment manufacturer Koss Corp. has entertained Milwaukee-area drivers for 17 years.

An estimated 66,000 people a day drive past Koss Corp.'s international headquarters on Interstate 43 north of Capitol Drive and its attention-grabbing two-sided outdoor board. The board displays 16 foot by 36 foot painted bulletins bearing slogans such as "Wrap Music"—with a visual of a mummy wearing headphones—for northbound traffic; southbound travelers are treated to "Pi-Kosso," which features a Picasso painting complete with headphones.

John Koss Sr., company chairman and founder, is the father of the 17-year-old pun-filled campaign. "We had been in our new building a year or two when our marketing director mentioned what a shame it was to waste all that traffic out there," says Mr. Koss.

"We wanted something light; just to let people know that Milwaukee was the home of Koss headphones," he says.

The first board to go up about a year later was a happy face without headphones and copy that asked: "Ever wonder why he's smiling?"

Two weeks later the answer came with the addition of headphones to the happy face.

Mona Lisa asked the same question later that year.

From then on, changing with the seasons, another pop personality or historical figure appeared on the boards, always with Koss headphones and comic commentary:

- George Washington reminded viewers "Father knows best," suggested by son Michael Koss, president-chief operating officer of the company;
- Abraham Lincoln announced, "Not all stereophones are created equal";
- Noah, of Noah and the Ark fame, added, "Noah's favorite pair."

The two outdoor boards' creative costs about $25,000 a year, but "we could rent the boards for $4,000 a month so it's costing us another $50,000," says Mr. Koss.

Milwaukee is the only permanent site for the advertising, but from 1973 through the Los Angeles Olympic Games the boards also were in Chicago, Dallas, Los Angeles and New York's Times Square and Holland Tunnel.

"It got to be very expensive and it required too much administration, so we cut back," he says. "We may do it again," he adds. "It's very effective."

In 1986, Mr. Koss changed advertising agencies and decided at the same time to completely turn "his baby" over to Curro Eichenbaum of Milwaukee—the previous agency, Kloppenburg Switzer & Teich, Milwaukee, did some of the work.

Although the Milwaukee agency now handles the effort, Mr. Koss still reviews all ideas and has the final say on new boards.

The most popular board, until this year, had been one picturing the late actor James Dean. "Rebel Without a Koss" and "With a Koss." But "PiKosso" is now No. 1, Mr. Koss says.

"It's easy to pick the good ones. It only takes a few parties and meetings" to discover a board's promotional aptitude, he says. □

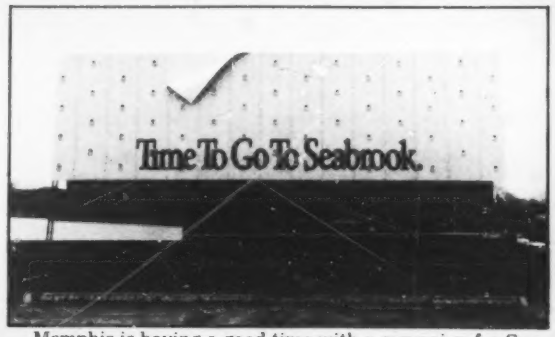
Houston's KPRC-TV's fall schedule was announced via a campaign by Hively Agency, Houston. Posted on the city's major highways, the light weight (150 pounds) and quick assembly of the computer-painted bulletins from Metro-Media Technologies allows the outdoor board to be changed every day.

D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles' used fiber-optic technology to add sparkle to Pontiac airport diorama in selected airports and train stations. A burst of light moves across the diorama illuminating the copy as it travels from left to right. Art Director, Elaine Ohno and Copywriter Paul Stawski created the ad.

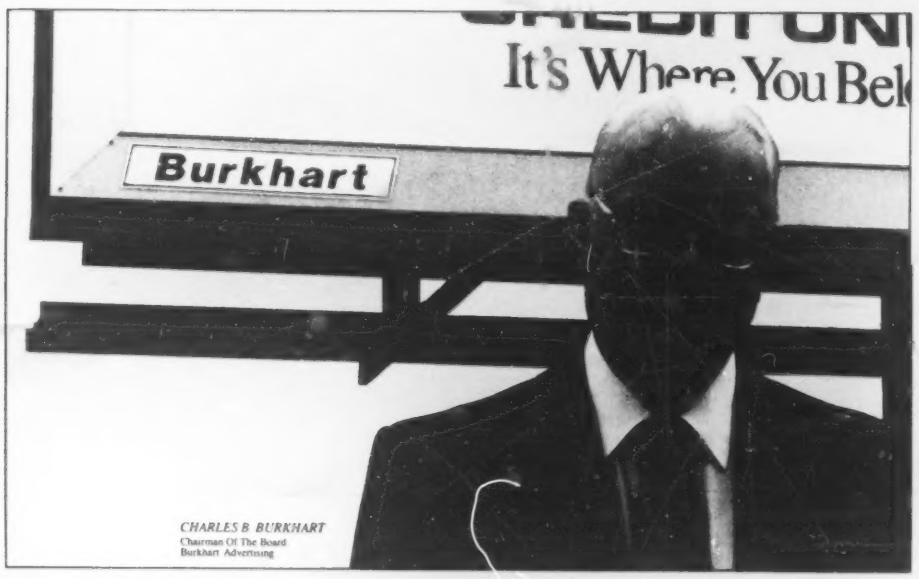
Chiclets' "Chew your face off" will keep gum chewers laughing and Warner-Lambert Canada—Adams Brands happy with this bronze-award winner at Mediacom's 11th Annual Billi Awards show Sept. 26 in Toronto, from J. Walter Thompson Co. Art director is Robert Ito and copywriter is Steve Roxborough.

The three-dimensional CNN camera is watching whenever you happen to look. And once you look, its eye follows your movement as you walk. CNN used a new photographic technique, from Grayson Marshall, Los Angeles, that creates a 3-D effect for the airport dioramas. Creative was done in-house at CNN.



Memphis is having a good time with a campaign for Seabrook Wallcoverings created by Thompson & Company, Memphis. Customers, suppliers and other retailers come in daily with comments about the "peeling paper." One elderly woman called Seabrook to tell them their board needed repair, "the paper is peeling off," she said. Michael H. Thompson is creative director; Trace Hallowell is art director and copywriter.

Panasonic Co.'s outdoor board at the New Jersey entrance to the Lincoln Tunnel has been lighting automatically for the last year. Allied Outdoor Advertising, the first outdoor company to use the system, can turn the lights on or off by pressing a key on a computer control panel. The computerized radio controlled lighting system can be programmed for precise, pre-selected times or changed manually in response to rainy days when instant lighting is needed.



We're Celebrating 25 Years.

In 1964, South Bend's economy was reeling from the closing of the Studebaker Corporation's automotive plant. It seemed an inauspicious time to think of beginning a new corporation.

But Charlie Burkhart had an idea. So he incorporated, and the seven employees of the newly formed Burkhart Advertising went to work out of their small office, providing outdoor advertising to South Bend and Mishawaka.

Today, 25 years later, the privately held Indiana company has a payroll of over $3 million and has four strategically located offices in northern Indiana. Over the years, too, Burkhart's business has expanded to include signage of all kinds as well as outdoor advertising.

We at Burkhart are proud of our company, proud of our growth and proud to be celebrating this milestone 25th anniversary.

"It's perfect evidence of the [outdoor] industry's desire to be especially responsive to the needs of advertisers," says Don Byer, president of the Institute of Outdoor Advertising.

"[OAI] could be useful for agencies, especially smaller agencies with fewer [international] affiliates," says Mr. Riordan.

Don Sperring, European media director at Young & Rubicam, London, agrees that smaller agencies may find more use for the OAI network than larger ones.

But a recent joint venture between Avenir, a French poster company, and Mills & Allan, a British financial group, could prove to be formidable competition to OAI in buying outdoor throughout Europe, he says.

John Hope, senior VP-general manager of Gannett Outdoor Network USA, the group that five years ago pioneered the concept of an outdoor media-buying network in the U.S., sees the value of OAI's program.

Still, the Outdoor Network never made the global move because, as Mr. Hope says, "we felt we had too much to do here before we branched out."

OAI is forecasting about $11 million in billings for its first full year. Industry experts note the dropping of the European trade barriers in 1992 is expected to lure more U.S. advertisers to European markets.

"1992 is very relevant" to the formation of OAI, Mr. Beck says.

"Major international advertisers are going to move increasingly into trans-frontier outdoor advertising in Europe because outdoor is the only medium that presents no translation problems when the creative treatment is right," he says.

Mr. Beck feels OAI will help boost outdoor revenues in some countries. For example, with a small outdoor board market in Japan, he predicts Japanese business, which is still learning the ropes in outdoor advertising, will likely flow into the U.S. through the joint-venture partner there. □

Trim Panel II, which is about a quarter of the thickness of current boards, is designed to rid the industry of ugliness and bring new advertisers into the medium.

Gannett goes back to drawing board

By Bradley Johnson

Gannett Outdoor Group's boards of the future are a little like the Stealth Bomber: sleek, attractive and costly. They also share another common element. "The same technology that was used for the Stealth Bomber," says James Keller, Gannett's divisional VP-marketing.

Gannett's new design, dubbed Trim Panel II, is just 5½ inches thick vs. about 2 feet for regular boards. It is composed of off-white-colored Fiberglas that eliminates the massive, rust-prone open steel structure on the back of traditional boards.

Gannett has spent several hundred thousand dollars over the past four years developing the outdoor boards, says Don Davidson, president of Gannett Outdoor Group. The new boards cost more than $5,000 each, about twice the price of current boards, he says.

Gannett believes its investment will bring new advertisers on board, appeal to existing ones and —maybe most important—mollify critics by presenting a less obtrusive structure.

The project began three years ago when California architect Robert Sully suggested the beleagured industry would benefit by taking the traditional structures back to the drawing board.

Traditional boards are "just damn ugly. I can do something about ugly," says Mr. Sully, president of Argonaut Co., a Santa Monica, Calif., architectural and design company.

Gannett, already working on streamlined boards, took the architect's offer. The result—following input from an aeronautical engineer, field testing in rural Tennessee and wind testing in Phoenix—is the Trim Panel II.

Gannett is preparing to sell the board's merits to cities, which call the shots on placement, and it will make design specs available to competitors at no cost. □

A series of teaser ads in Chicago has cost Young & Rubicam about $10,000.

Dots not all for Y&R

Agency takes to teasing Chicago

By Jon Lafayette

Young & Rubicam's Chicago office has taken on the unusual position of playing both client and agency. The shop is placing a mysterious series of ads on one of Chicago's more expensive and visible outdoor boards.

The teaser ads have played a guessing game with pedestrians and motorists on the city's famed Michigan Avenue.

The creative strategy is to start with a nonsense message and then resolve it in a progression of boards that change every two weeks.

During the campaign's first two weeks, beginning July 23, the poster made no sense at all: just a series of five large dots.

On the next board, the final dot turned into an exclamation point, with "Y&R Chicago" beneath it.

The next board, minus the agency's name, showed five traffic lights, all flashing yellow. Two weeks later, the first four traffic lights were red; the fifth signal was green and "Y&R Chicago" returned beneath it.

The next board showed a daytime rendering of the Chicago skyline. On Oct. 2, the final installment appeared: a nighttime scene of Chicago's skyline with one building illuminated. That bright spot is Y&R's offices, of course. The campaign ends Oct. 22.

In explaining the motivation behind the campaign, Pat Cafferata, president-ceo of Y&R, Chicago, calls it "just a lark. There was [an outdoor board] on Michigan Avenue that was going to be free for a while. One of our clients was going to buy it, then decided not to. So we just decided to take it for ourselves."

Renting the board has cost the agency more than $10,000.

Ms. Cafferata says the agency has been pleased by the response to the campaign. "It got a lot of people talking," she says.

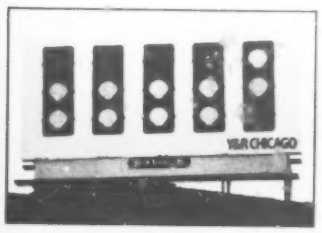
"We're known for our creative, so it shouldn't be a surprise we would do something like this," she says. "We've had a lot of phone calls. People ask, 'What is that?' and we say it's just for fun."

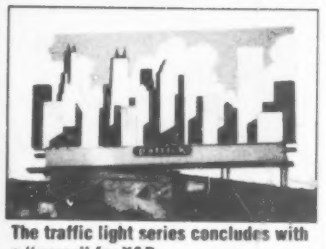
But all good things must come to an end.

"It would become everyday if we tried to keep doing it. Besides, we couldn't afford it," Ms. Cafferata says.

And some people will be sad when Y&R's campaign is replaced by a regular ad from a regular marketer, she surmises.

"I think they'll be disappointed when it comes down." [ ]





The traffic light series concludes with a "green" for Y&R.

Double trouble in Wrigleyville

Wrong building gets message

The building on the top is right; the building on the bottom is wrong.

As part of a promotion, WLUP-AM, Chicago, wanted the face of its sportscaster Chet Coppock painted on a building across the street from Wrigley Field in view of Chicago Cubs fans, TV viewers and passersby. WLUP got his face and the message—Coppock on Sports, Evenings, WLUP-AM 1000—[illegible], but it was on the wrong

Either painters lost their way, [illegible] wrong address or wanted n[illegible]et Coppock.

What h[illegible]

"We contracted for the wall at 3709 [Sheffield Ave.], and we said it was by Wrigley Field by the Red Top parking lot," says Larry Wert, WLUP VP-general manager. "The only problem was that there was another building, 3621 to be exact, that was also near the parking lot."

After the painting was completed on 3621 Sheffield and the error surfaced, Mr. Coppock's likeness was added to 3709 Sheffield as well.

"Personally, we think it's one of the [most] terrific blunders we've made all year," says Mr. Wert. "The mistake couldn't have occurred in a better place than the friendly confines of Wrigley Field." It also couldn't have happened at a better time: mid-September as the Cubs headed into their National League East division pennant-clinching stretch.

The residents of 3621 are not complaining to WLUP or The Billboard Co., which painted the Eisaman, Johns & Laws Advertising, Chicago, designed ad, but payment is being negotiated.

The subject of the painting has no qualms about his mug being the talk of Sheffield Ave.

"Chet was thrilled," says Mr. Wert, who was rather pleased himself. "Twice as much Coppock is better than no Coppock."

Out-of-home, despite its best intentions, just can't seem to kick certain vices.

Painfully aware that its fortunes are closely tied to heavily scrutinized, often-embattled tobacco advertising, the outdoor industry has worked to cultivate new categories.

The industry has met with some success. For example, package goods have been pursued with ardor; that category has ascended to the top 10 among outdoor advertisers with gross billings rising an estimated 38% from 1986 to year-end 1989, according to the Institute of Outdoor Advertising.

But while one "vice" category—beer/wine/liquor—has dropped 6.2% in the same time frame, tobacco maintains its preeminent position.

In fact, outdoor tobacco advertising will account for an estimated 32.1% of billings among the leading 10 categories, just a fraction less than the 32.3% it commanded in 1986. During this time, total tobacco billings rose an estimated 17.1%.

IOA estimates total outdoor media billings will hit more than $1.5 billion by yearend. The top 10 advertising categories will account for a substantial 86.6% of total 1989 outdoor billings; tobacco advertising alone will represent 27.8% of all outdoor advertising.

But some bright spots lessen the concern over tobacco's commanding role.

Retailers are now outdoor's second-largest advertising category, spending $150.9 million this year. This 52.6% increase since 1986 makes retail the fastest growing category among the top 10.

Publishing/media and entertainment/amusement were the next strongest categories from 1986 to 1989, increasing an estimated 48.6% and 40.8%, respectively.

Along with beer/wine/liquor, the softest categories were insurance/real estate and travel/hotel, which dropped 13.3% and 7% from 1986 to 1989, respectively.

Insurance/real estate continues to fall, recording the sharpest drop this year—19.1%. □

LAUNCHING PAD

Startup to take on 'TV Guide'

New publication launches.

'TV Times'

Tests of TV Times, working title for a new weekly TV and entertainment magazine, are planned for February in San Diego and Huntington Beach, Calif.

This newest challenger to Rupert Murdoch's TV Guide is from TVSM, New York, whose monthly Cable Guide (circulation 7.2 million) already makes it the nation's largest cable TV guide publisher.

Unlike Cable Guide, which is paid for by cable system operators and distributed free to cable subscribers, TV Times will cost $2.79 a month. TV Guide sells for 75¢ per copy.

TV Times will be a full-size magazine compared with the digest-size TV Guide. The cable listings in TV Times will cover only those programs offered by the subscriber's cable system. TV Guide's broader cable listings cover all program offerings in a geographical market.

Like TV Guide, TV Times will publish broadcast channel listings.

A similar venture—TV-Cable Week, launched by Time Inc. in 1983—folded after six months and posted losses of some $47 million.

TV Week Network, representing 29 major market Sunday newspaper TV program guides, was organized last year to compete with TV Guide for TV tune-in ad dollars.

TVSM's new weekly will initially serve two cable systems that will start rolling out nationally next September and should be serving 300 systems within four years, said Mark Edmiston, chairman-ceo.

Cable Guide advertisers will be offered special charter rates in the new magazine, he said. TV Times will eventually be sold to advertisers as part of a package with Cable Guide.

TV Times interim publisher is Cable Guide Publisher Alan Wragg and its interim editor is Cable Guide Editor Jay Gissan. TV Times offices are at 475 Fifth Ave., New York 10017. Phone: (212) 683-6116. □

COVER STORY

Liz leads September star parade

"Cover Story" is a monthly ranking of celebrities' popularity as reflected by their appearances on the covers of more than 30 of the nation's leading publications.

September brings thoughts of back-to-school sales, Labor Day barbecues and falling leaves.

For celebrity-magazine cover editors, the ninth month brings the start of TV's new fall season. And that means it's time for . . . Fall Preview issues.

For "Cover Story," which assigns point values to cover appearances based on such factors as prominence of the photo and frequency of the publication, it meant a month where no star shone too bright and no score rose too high.

Elizabeth Taylor, perennial favorite among checkout-counter tabloids, was September's Cover Queen, riding publicity from her appearance in the TV version of the Tennessee Williams play, "Sweet Bird of Youth."

Additional points were scored by her presence at companion Malcolm Forbes' star-studded 70th birthday party in Morocco.

Even she scored just 6.5 "Cover Story" points, a very low total for a monthly champ.

Placing second for the month was—surprise—Roseanne Barr, the hottest cover celebrity to date. Ms. Barr's 6 points in September lifted her year-to-date total to 64.5, a mere 3 points behind the record set by Princess Di in 1987.

The publication of Ms. Barr's new tell-some book, "Roseanne: My Life as a Woman," and her promotional appearances kept media attention focused her way.

Third-place honors went to Dolly Parton with 5 points. We're still trying to figure out why.

Among the other celebrities whose faces stared back at us from the newsstands in September: Bill Cosby (4.5 points); John Goodman (3); Kim Basinger (3); Joan Rivers (3); Sam Donaldson (3); Oprah Winfrey (2); Michael J. Fox (2); and Kirk Cameron (2).

Honorable mention: Exxon Valdez disaster in Alaska. News that the oil company was halting its cleanup operation earned 10 "Cover Story" points. □

TRACKING SHARES

Baseball suffers in network slump

A ratings and demographic analysis of TV programs.

As Major League Baseball's National and American League championship series draw to a close, "Tracking Shares" takes a look at how baseball has been doing in the ratings game.

"The World Series." Some observers are braced for audience slippage. Though the ratings have slid from the early '80's, "the numbers going down are just part and parcel of the overall network [audience] erosion," said Bill Croasdale, senior VP-director of national broadcast at Backer Spielvogel Bates, New York. "I think if the numbers dip this year it will be because of that, not because of the teams involved. The networks are doing a better job of promoting themselves, but I think there will be some erosion."

Big markets don't always mean big ratings. Philadelphia's victory over Kansas City in 1980 earned a 32.8 Nielsen rating with a 56% share of the TV audience. That stands as the highest-rated World Series of the decade. Last year, the five-game series between the Los Angeles Dodgers and Oakland Athletics on NBC averaged only a 23.9 rating and a 39% share, the third-lowest average Series rating in the past 10 years.

Demographics: (five-game average in '88) Women (18-34) 8.8; (18-49) 10.4; (25-54) 11.8. Men (18-34) 15.2; (18-49) 16.3; (25-54) 17.8.

"League Championship Series" In the past five years, the Nationals have tended to draw a bigger share of the audience, but the American League playoff between Detroit and Kansas City in 1984, with an average rating of 16.7, has been the highest of any playoff in the past five years.

Ratings: American League: 11.0 (Oakland vs. Boston, ABC, 1988); 14.5 (Minnesota vs. Detroit, NBC, 1987); 15.7 (Boston vs. California, ABC, 1986); 15.8 (Kansas City vs. Toronto, NBC, 1985); 16.7 (Detroit vs. Kansas City, ABC, 1984).

National League: 15.3 (Los Angeles vs. New York, ABC, 1988); 15.4 (St. Louis vs. San Francisco, NBC, 1987); 14.9 (New York vs. Houston, ABC, 1986); 15.4 (St. Louis vs. Los Angeles, NBC, 1985); 15.9 (San Diego vs. Chicago, ABC, 1984).

"All-Star Game." This traditional midseason classic is one of baseball's most consistent performers as a showcase for the sport's best players. ABC and NBC again have alternated coverage, but CBS has four-year rights starting next year.

Ratings: 18.2 (NBC, 1989); 20.4 (ABC, 1988); 19.3 (NBC, 1987); 20.3 (ABC, 1986); 20.5 (NBC, 1985); 20.1 (ABC, 1984).

"Game of the Week" (NBC). Network baseball telecasts on Saturday afternoon have been synonymous with NBC for decades. But next season, CBS will telecast 12 weekend games during the season, while ESPN programs 175 games for its national cable audience. ESPN plans double-headers Tuesday and Friday nights and single games Wednesday and Sunday. That's a lot of baseball. NBC averaged about 20 telecasts each year. Facing competition from local TV station game telecasts and regional sports networks telecasting more and more games on cable TV, the "Game of the Week" average ratings have shown a decline.

Ratings: 5.0 (1989); 5.5 (1988); 5.9 (1987); 6.4 (1986); 6.5 (1985); 6.4 (1984).

"Monday/Thursday Night Baseball" (ABC). ABC hoped to extend its "Monday Night Football" success into another sport, but "Monday Night Baseball" never really caught on. It averaged single-digit ratings for its eight telecasts a year since 1985. This year, ABC shifted its prime-time baseball coverage to Thursday night, reaching a new low of 6.2 for its average rating this year.

Ratings: 6.2 (1989); 8.0 (1988); 8.8 (1987); 9.4 (1986); 9.5 (1985); 10.7 (1984). □

TV station takes slap at price ads

By Janet Meyers

Sick of commercials with screaming salesmen touting lowest-ever prices?

So was Norfolk, Va.'s WVEC-TV when the station launched an anti-bad ad campaign starring five of the state's top ad executives.

The ABC affiliate provided $200,000 in airtime for six weeks starting Oct. 2 for a campaign to persuade retailers to produce classier spots.

The campaign is the brainchild of Chris Johnson, WVEC's marketing manager, who decided to go ahead with the campaign after research showed viewers weren't thrilled about price commercials on TV.

"Advertisers have given up any kind of image advertising in favor of this price advertising," said Ms. Johnson, who claimed she's not afraid advertisers will retaliate by pulling their ads. "They should at least mix in some image advertising with price."

Each agency executive wrote his own spot for the campaign. Featured are Dan Ballard, president, Lawler Ballard, Norfolk; Bill Campbell, exec VP-creative director, Barker Campbell Farley, Virginia Beach; and Richmond executives David Martin, chairman, Hawley Martin Partners; Doug Burford, president, Burford Co.; and Tim Finnegan, chairman, Finnegan & Agee. A sixth spot features WVEC President Bill Beindorf.

David Martin and his chair get attention in a campaign aimed at discouraging screaming, price-oriented spots.

Mr. Martin is shown sitting in a big green leather chair, saying nothing as he squeakily shifts position. Then he lights his pipe, finally saying, "You don't have to shout to get someone's attention."

The spot featuring Mr. Campbell closes with him saying, "Cheap-cheap is a bird call, not a marketing strategy."

WVEC handled production of the spots.

Ms. Johnson wouldn't disclose any particular marketers' advertising that bothers her or even categories of advertisers guilty of price advertising. "I don't want anybody to feel we have singled them out," she said.

Are the ad executives fearful of clients being unhappy with the ads? Mr. Campbell said he thinks the campaign might turn away some potential clients.

"But to be real honest, that's not the kind of advertising I want to do," he said. "To put dozens of prices into a 30-second commercial is not going to be very effective." □ produce a response at the cash register will be in question," said Steven Butterman, president, Butterman Retail Marketing.

"If retailers find their backs to the wall, they'll start chipping away at this line item and that, and it's not an unlikely possibility that advertising [budgets] will be hurt," said James Newton, president, Economic Perspectives, a retail consultancy.

Inventories will be tightened by debt-strapped retailers.

"It could become a vicious cycle. Stores won't have enough merchandise, so managements will say consumer interest isn't there. Meanwhile, consumers won't buy it if they can't find it," said Marvin J. Rothenberg, president of Marvin J. Rothenberg Inc., a retail marketing consultancy.

But of immediate concern to retailers and manufacturers is the upcoming holiday season, expected to be tough for retailers because of persistent consumer caution (AA, Sept. 11).

One risk is that chains will become preoccupied with their future and that both customer service and sales will suffer as a result.

"Everyone will be gossiping, wondering about their future. . . . The conventional wisdom is that [management changes or new financial structures] are not going to affect service on the selling floor. But that's baloney: It always affects service," said one former department store sales promotion executive who asked not to be identified.

Another risk is that cash-hungry retailers will pick up the pace of off-price promotions, forcing the entire industry to respond, or will adopt new everyday low-price positions, intensifying price competition.

For example, Macy's decision to institute everyday low pricing for its women's coats has been featured prominently in print ads from its in-house agency.

Still, executives at several of the chains making headlines say this holiday season will be business as usual.

"Everything is going ahead as planned," said Paul Lenlang, senior VP at Saks Fifth Avenue, noting that Christmas advertising and promotional schedules were in place months ago.

"Our value is as an ongoing retail concern: in generating traffic and sales. We're not going to change the plans we have in any way," he said. □

End of an era: Louis-Dreyfus to lead Saatchi

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—The Saatchi & Saatchi decade, which triggered revolutionary changes in the agency business worldwide, is over.

Last week, Maurice and Charles Saatchi turned over the reins of their agency holding company to a financially oriented Frenchman, Robert Louis-Dreyfus. He's the first outsider to be given wide latitude over the Saatchi empire.

This marks the end of a three-part notion carried to extremes by the idiosyncratic brothers: that agency holding companies can expand endlessly on the back of an ever-increasing stock price; that agency clients will do one-stop shopping at these holding companies for every service—even consulting; and that the idea of "world brands" manufactured, marketed and positioned the same way everywhere is viable in almost all categories.

The Saatchis changed the rules about the advertising business, but "the rules changed back on them," said Greg Ostroff, analyst at Goldman, Sachs & Co.

Nevertheless, "The fact that they did what they did has fundamentally changed the industry," said Robert Riphagen, director of corporate and consumer electronics marketing communications at NV Philips, Eindhoven, the Netherlands.

Roger Tully

Robert Louis-Dreyfus, former head of IMS International, takes over as chief executive of Saatchi & Saatchi Co. Jan. 1.

Roy Warman, joint chief operating officer of Saatchi & Saatchi Co., told Advertising Age that reports of a Saatchi era ending are "rubbish."

"I think we've all known for some time that the bull market and paper-driven acquisition campaign has been over since the [1987 stock market] crash," he said. But this period of major acquisitions "is over not because we couldn't see having the capability again but because we don't see the need for it in the communications business," he added.

Goldman Sachs' Mr. Ostroff said most of Saatchi's financial problems go back to the way it paid for its purchases, more than what it bought.

Saatchi raised money for most of its acquisitions by selling new stock through "rights offerings." At the time, the rights offerings were seen as a powerful tool that enabled British companies to outbid their U.S. counterparts.

In the end, Mr. Ostroff said, the rights offerings became "one of the most expensive routes possible" because of the dividends the company had to pay for its stock.

"The way those deals were structured, the company found that any new cash flows they added were already spent," he said. In addition to dividends, Saatchi agreed to make deferred payments based on earnings to the companies it acquired.

Industry executives believe a death knell sounded last week when the Saatchis briefly calmed the financial community with the dramatic turnover of their pre-

Edwin L. Artzt will have two foreign-born execs running P&G's U.S. businesses.

Artzt puts global stamp on P&G

By Laurie Freeman

CINCINNATI—Call it the globalization of Procter & Gamble Co.'s management.

The anointment of Edwin L. Artzt as chairman-ceo-in-waiting at P&G underscores the company's commitment to the international side of its business.

As vice chairman and president of P&G International since 1984, Mr. Artzt, 59, orchestrated a dramatic turnaround for P&G in Japan, a vital marketplace for any marketer with international ambitions.

It's widely believed Mr. Artzt's performance in Japan catapulted him past President John E. Pepper and into the role of successor to John G. Smale, who plans to step down in January.

Mr. Smale, 62, who in 1985 guided P&G through its first earnings decline in 33 years and has significantly expanded P&G's businesses through aggressive acquisitions, made the announcement last week at the company's annual meeting.

In a later interview with Advertising Age, Mr. Artzt said he has "an agenda, but I'd rather wait" until he officially assumes the job before saying what's on the list.

"Basically, we've got a good thing going here. I've been a part of it, and I'm going to keep it going," he said. "There are changes that are going to be made, but

Industry shivers after market drop

NEW YORK—The stock market's 189.96-point nose dive Friday, almost two years after the Oct. 19, 1987, plunge, sent tremors through the marketing community.

Saatchi & Saatchi's American Depositary Receipts on the New York Stock Exchange closed Friday down more than $1, to less than $15. Interpublic Group of Cos. stock fell more than $3 a share from the Thursday close of $36. Other agency stocks were unchanged or down slightly.

The market drop could make a Saatchi takeover "more likely because the stock went down so it's cheaper or . . . less likely because whoever it is could be looking to the stock market to raise money [to finance the takeover] and find it difficult to do so," said Alan Gottesman, analyst at PaineWebber.

Because of the drop, Merrill Lynch pulled a 30-second spot touting energy stocks due to air Oct. 15. Four other spots from Merrill's ongoing campaign via Bozell aired.

PaineWebber put Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising on alert and may produce one of the overnight commercials that it's been running intermittently since the 1987 market tumble.

'Woman's Day' cuts its rate base

By Scott Donaton

Diamandis Communications Inc.'s Woman's Day, acknowledging it's been suffering side effects from the launch of Bauer Publishing's First for Women, is lowering its rate base in 1990.

The Seven Sisters magazine, which saw circulation fall 14.3% in the first half of the year to 4.4 million, will lower its guaranteed rate base by an average of almost 9% next year. Ad rates will remain the same, increasing the magazine's cost per thousand.

Woman's Day is also reorganizing its rate structures. The magazine will shift to a two-tier from a three-tier structure, with different rate bases and ad rates.

The 11 issues published from January to September will have a rate base of 4.6 million, down 8% from 1989. The four issues published from October to December will have a rate base of 5.5 million, a 9.7% decrease.

The new b&w CPM for both tiers will be $13.27 and the new color CPM will be $15.89.

In an effort to stabilize the magazine's circulation, Publisher Robert Mate said Woman's Day will make a concentrated effort to build its subscriber base. Subscriptions now account for only 2% of total circulation. Mr. Mate said he'd like that figure to go as high as 10% next year.

Although the exact tools for building the base haven't been determined, direct-mail campaigns and special premium offers are among the options, he said.

The reasons for the changes include the impact of First on the single-copy marketplace and Woman's Day's recent cover price increase, Mr. Mate said.

Woman's Day and The New York Times Co. Magazine Group's Family Circle, which both rely heavily on single-copy sales, recorded double-digit circulation declines in the first half of the year, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations (AA, Aug. 21).

The Seven Sisters magazine lost 14.3% of its circulation.

When those figures came out, industry observers said it was too early to tell whether the circulation drops represented long-term changes or buyer trial of First, launched in February and backed by a $14 million ad campaign and a 25¢ first-issue cover price.

But Woman's Day's latest move is viewed as proof that First—which raised its cover price to $1 with the March issue—is changing the marketplace.

"Woman's Day is saying, 'We recognize how difficult the newsstand business is and First has found a position,' " said Steven Farella, exec VP-director of corporate media services at Wells, Rich, Greene, New York. "It's a big move."

Mr. Farella said Woman's Day should also have considered lowering its ad rates to keep its CPM steady: "It would have been a smarter marketing move."

For the first eight months of 1989, the magazine's ad pages rose 12.8% to 1,087.2.

A b&w page in first-tier issues will be $61,045, and a color page will be $73,075; a b&w page in the second tier will be $73,010, and a color page will be $87,398.

Woman's Day increased its cover price to $1.09 from 99¢ in October 1988. DCI executives blamed the price increase for a dip in the magazine's circulation to 5.6 million for the six months ended Dec. 31.

First, as a new magazine, isn't yet listed in the Audit Bureau's circulation reports, but Todd Selbert, First advertising director, said its rate base is 4 million.

Woman's Day's move doesn't surprise him. "What I said would happen in the mass-market women's field has happened. We expanded the market," he said. "We're just trying to mind our own business and let the chips fall where they may." □

Saatchi's clients say: 'Call us, not analysts'

An Advertising Age roundup

Clients of Saatchi & Saatchi Co.'s agencies aren't alarmed by ownership questions swirling about the company, but they do wish Saatchi would tell them what's going on.

While Maurice Saatchi diligently phoned analysts and investors in New York and London to spread the news about Robert Louis-Dreyfus, the company's new chief executive, Saatchi's biggest clients were learning about it from reporters' phone calls.

Officials at Procter & Gamble Co., one of Saatchi's largest worldwide clients, were caught off-guard by news of the appointment, saying they hadn't been told yet. But one source later said P&G will "wait and see what happens" as a result of the executive turnover or takeover speculation.

"As long as Saatchi produces quality creative work for P&G, it's not going to affect P&G's relationship with the agency," the source said.

"My first reaction is that I'm surprised to hear about the new chief executive," said a similarly baffled Wim Slootweg, director of communications for Sara Lee/Douwe Egberts, based in Utrecth, the Netherlands.

"I just talked to two Saatchi execs who didn't give me a hint," Mr. Slootweg said Oct. 12, the day of the announcement.

"Obviously, what happens to the ownership does not concern us except when it starts having an effect on creative," Mr. Slootweg said. "So far, it has not had any effect. However, insecurity and instability are going to worry some people, and I wonder how long it can go on without affecting people. We've said we're worried about quality, and they've given us reassurances."

At least one other client, who asked to remain anonymous, said he'd welcome a takeover bid. "I would personally be delighted if someone else owned Saatchi & Saatchi," this U.S. client said.

"They concentrate too much on the bottom line to the detriment of service," this source said. "While it doesn't necessarily affect the day-to-day work on our account, I've lost some very good people on the business who have left the agency."

"Yes, it's a cause for concern," said Dave Danzer, corporate marketing manager at Toyota Motor Sales USA. "We'd like them to be stable. A change of ownership would cause us great concern."

Some other clients privately complained, as one put it, of a "somewhat lower level of excellence in servicing accounts" after the acquisitions and mergers of such agencies as Backer & Spielvogel, Ted Bates Worldwide, Compton Advertising, Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, Campbell-Mithun and William Esty Co.

PaineWebber late last week started an "internal review" of its account at Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising, said John Lampe, senior VP-director of advertising and public relations, who earlier had stated that the news about Saatchi had "no impact on our relationship."

Sources said the company is in talks with McCann-Erickson Worldwide.

Most clients, however, seemed unconcerned or withheld judgment on the developments until they could gauge its effect on their business. □

Exploring for Hispanic gold

Will agencies traveling merger route come up empty?

By Ed Fitch

Without knowing it, Gerald Wilhite may be inheriting the legacy of Spanish explorer Francisco Vasquez de Coronado.

Coronado gained notoriety by searching for the Seven Cities of Gold, rumored to be laden with precious jems and gold. He found Kansas.

Mr. Wilhite, president of D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, is a modern-day Coronado, looking for riches in the Hispanic market. D'Arcy recently bought 49% of Sosa & Associates, a top Hispanic market shop located in San Antonio, Texas.

Mr. Wilhite is not alone in his quest. The Saatchi brothers, Martin Sorrell, Allen Rosenshine, all of these agency conquistadores have acquired Hispanic agencies.

"It's a thing you have to do eventually," says Marvin Sloves, chairman, Scali, McCabe, Sloves. "Someday we may be acquiring one, and we could get a good profit center out of it."

The motivation for most agencies is more than profit, says Paul Casanova, president of independent shop Casanova, Pendrill Publicidad. "The general-market agencies simply want to keep control of the business," he says. "The market will continue to grow, and more dollars will be put against the Hispanic market. They just want to make sure it's part of their program. It's the dog wagging the tail."

Dick Dillon points to client demand. "Even if they can't make any money off it, if the clients want it, they want to deliver," says the president of WPP Group subsidiary Mendoza, Dillon & Asociados. "Or they see XYZ agency has a Hispanic arm and they want one too."

Certainly the hype factor surrounding the Hispanic market is at its highest. Headlines touting the "hot new market" are common, encouraging agencies to see this as a niche profit center.

The question is, will they find Kansas instead?

Corporate ad expenditures in the market grew only 12.1% to $550.1 million last year, according to Hispanic Business. Sources speculate the market will grow only 15% this year to about $630 million.

Welcome to Kansas.

"I don't know if it's hype," says Mr. Dillon. "But are there people [from general-market agencies] coming into it with expectations that far exceed the reality? There sure are."

An Advertising Age survey of 35 Hispanic agencies indicates what acquisition-minded general-market agencies' expectations should be. Media billings among these agencies rose 42.8% to $223.4 million in 1988. But as of Sept. 5, 1989, annualized billings growth rate had slowed to 34.8%.

Total capitalized volume increased 21.9% to $407.3 million in 1988. That figure is growing at a 36.3% rate this year.

But Mr. Dillon still urges caution to interested general-market shops. "People can't come into this market and expect it's going to double or triple in size," he says.

When the buyout binge began, some speculated that the big agencies would jumpstart corporate expenditures. "The jury is still out on that," says a source whose Hispanic market shop was bought by a large agency. "But my gut feeling is that these buyouts don't do much to build the Hispanic agency."

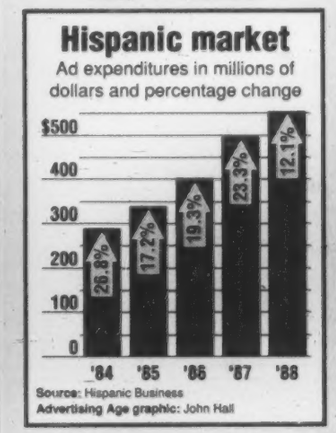
Mr. Casanova thinks the buyout craze has ended, "at least until the next wave. During the frenzy, the price of an agency went through the roof and the agencies have started to ask where's the payout."

Another reason the buying fever will abate is lack of targets, says Bruce Crawford, Omincom chairman-ceo. "Few sizable independent Hispanic agencies remain." □

Gary Levin contributed to this story.

BAROMETER

Take a number



Take the pulse

The U.S. Hispanic market has its roots in Spanish conquistadores. But it's been a long time since Spanish immigrants have had a major impact on the market's makeup.

Barometer speculates on which nationalities will follow Coronado's footsteps.

Colombia...Anarchy in the streets. Justice Minister Monica de Greff is only the first of many Colombians heading north.

Panama...Not as big an influx as expected following Old Pineapple Face's subtle form of governing. But the potential for mass emigration is there—as long as he is.

Mexico...Proximity alone makes it a player. But President Carlos Salinas de Gortari is making "Viva, Mexico" more than a slogan.

Nicaragua...People are actually moving back there?! When the "elections" are over they'll be back—with friends and family.

Spain...With the Olympics, and credit card-laden turistas about to overrun their country, Spaniards stand to make a killing.

Movietime to try new look

Programming and business-side developments in broadcasting.

Movietime isn't going to be just about movies anymore.

Early next year, Time Warner's Home Box Office will change the look of the advertiser-supported cable channel to attract new viewers and improve the 2-year-old channel's appeal to media buyers.

Movietime, jointly owned by Time Warner and several cable operators, primarily reaches the 12-34 age group but is skewed toward younger viewers.

HBO hopes to keep that audience while expanding the older segment. It plans to create a broader entertainment channel with faster-paced, personality-oriented programming; more regular segments; a "glitzy" on-air look; and, possibly, a new name.

Movietime has been under HBO's control since August, when the pay-cable network was assigned responsibility for Movietime ad sales, marketing and programming as part of HBO's expanding presence in basic, advertiser-supported cable.

"We're going to broaden—expand, if you will—from movies to more entertainment industry news," said Bob Grassi, acting ceo of Movietime and senior VP-sales operations and administration at HBO. "We'll add to what we cover, including TV, books, high-profile sports and celebrities in any field."

Creative ad rate packages are likely as part of the revamping under way at cable TV's Movietime network.

Mr. Grassi said he's looking at Movietime's rate structure and promised more creative ad packages will be offered to media buyers in the future.

Movietime programming now centers on clips of upcoming and current films, which it will continue to use to a lesser degree.

The channel has 14 million subscribers from more than 500 cable systems nationally. It carries 6 minutes of national advertising and 2 minutes of local advertising per hour.

Some of the changes at Movietime, set to make their debut sometime early next year, will include:

- Scheduling based on an hour-long "wheel" to add predictability to its programming. Regular segments, such as "Entertainment News Update" and "The Entertainment Guide" will be slotted at specific times within each 60-minute cycle.
- Heavily celebrity-oriented programming.
- An on-air appearance described by Mr. Grassi as a "glitzier, more 'celebrity and events' kind of look."
- Possibly a name change, to a moniker that reflects Movietime's broadened entertainment coverage.

Mike Sobel is senior VP-advertising sales at Movietime, whose offices are at 1800 N. Vine St., Third Floor, Hollywood, Calif. 90028. Phone: (213) 960-5800. □

InterCampus, the sole tour operator advertising in the magazine, will distribute 400,000 copies of the magazine to 300 campuses in January and February. An additional 200,000 copies will go to students vacationing in Daytona Beach, Fla., and 100,000 to campus bookstores. Ad rates more than double to $13,950 for a b&w page, $16,700 for a color page.

The October Musician sounds off with a complete redesign.

Honeymoon hookup. Modern Bride, New York, and American Express Vacations will publish a pair of 50-page honeymoon guides next year for soon-to-be newlyweds. "Carefree Sunnymoons" will be inserted into the February/March and August/September issues of Modern Bride. In addition to the magazine's circulation of about 400,000, AmEx will distribute 400,000 reprints of the section to retail travel agencies nationwide. The section's ad close is Oct. 22. A color half-page is $9,220. □

THE PRINTED WORD

Titles still feeling 'Black Monday'

Print media advertising and circulation performance.

Wall Street's "Black Monday," Oct. 19, 1987, hit hard at ad spending in personal finance magazines, which depend heavily on ads from mutual funds and brokerage houses. Most business magazine publishers believe the titles that survived so far should see ad pages perk up next year and that strong books should get stronger.

But the damage done was serious.

Time Warner's Money saw ad pages drop 10.5% in 1988, then another 8.3% in 1989's first eight months. Kiplinger Washington Editors' Changing Times lost 11.3% of its ad pages in 1988. For January to August 1989, ad pages dropped 10.9%.

Worst hit was Sylvia Porter's Personal Finance, which never recovered from a 29.7% ad page drop in 1988 and folded earlier this year. Venture suffered a similar fate. Its ad pages fell 16.4% in 1988. The downward spiral continued this year, with ad pages dropping 36.9% for the first eight months. Last month, Venture suspended publication.

Here's a look at how "Black Monday" affected some key business publications:

- Barron's—Ad pages: 1986, 2,095.2 (percentage change from 1985 not available); 1987, 2,528.6, up 20.7%; 1988, 2,114.7, down 16.4%; January to August 1989, 1,136.3, down 20.3% from the same period in 1988. January to June 1989 circulation (Audit Bureau of Circulations): 247,756, down 7%.
- Business Week—Ad pages: 1986, 3,893.2, down 7.6%; 1987, 4,708.9, up 21%; 1988, 4,586.3, down 2.6%; January to August, 2,728.1, up 5.3%. Circulation: 900,989, up 1%.

Bay area ad people digging out

By Alice Z. Cuneo and Cleveland Horton

SAN FRANCISCO—The advertising community in this shell-shocked city began putting the pieces back together late last week as it struggled to recover from the country's most severe earthquake since 1906.

Most of the physical damage suffered by the Bay area occurred in several isolated locations. But ad agencies, like most businesses here, watched their buildings sway and crack during the earthquake, which measured 6.9 on the Richter scale.

Possibly the most harrowing experience involving an agency executive happened to Foote, Cone & Belding Exec VP-General Manager Jack Balousek, who was in his car on the Bay Bridge when the earthquake struck—at 5:04 p.m. Oct. 17.

"I was on the suspension part of the bridge when the quake hit—about 15 to 18 cars from where the bridge collapsed," Mr. Balousek said.

"I've driven over that bridge for 11 years, and it was the first time I had a ride like that," he said. "It was like a Disneyland ride. Not only was the bridge undulating up and down, but the sideways motion left and right made it very hard for me to keep my Jeep on the road. You had the sensation the bridge would go over on its side."

The traffic came to a halt. Before he could roll down his window to see what was happening ahead, people came running and screaming toward his car. "The bridge is collapsing," he heard some shout.

He left his car and ran to Treasure Island, a man-made island in the Bay, where a line of 100 people were waiting to use a pay telephone to contact their families. Eventually, Mr. Balousek hitchhiked back to San Francisco. The next day he picked up his Jeep at a city lot.

New magazine strategy

'Marketing partnerships' with advertisers planned

By Scott Donaton

Magazine publishers and ad agency executives at this week's annual American Magazine Conference are expected to push for "marketing partnerships" with advertisers to help curtail off-rate-card deals.

That could mean magazines will be engaging in more cross-promotions with advertisers, in the same spirit as the CBS/K mart Corp. and NBC/Sears, Roebuck & Co. promotions that heralded the fall TV season.

"Clients are looking for more help focusing their efforts," said Jim Guthrie, exec VP-marketing development for the Magazine Publishers of America, co-sponsor of the event in Naples, Fla. "The more they can focus on the quality they offer advertisers, the less necessary it is to get into discussions on rate."

The concept of marketing partnerships involves publishers providing advertisers with customized research, doing cross-promotions, jointly sponsoring events and publishing special, single-sponsor issues.

This is seen as a new twist on "added-value," in which publishers offered advertisers incentives such as tickets to sporting events, free radios and cruises.

"Tickets and TVs are just another way of cutting rates," said Jack Kliger, publisher of Glamour. "Marketing partnerships can either stop rate negotiation or become yet another word for it. I see them as something which, if genuinely pursued by all parties, can enhance the benefits to everyone."

Even Dale Lang, chairman of Lang Communications, is embracing the concept.

Mr. Lang rocked the magazine industry in 1986 when he announced that McCall's, of which he was publisher, would openly negotiate rates. Now he says rate negotiation is "destructive" and "weakens the product."

Marketing partnerships are a beginning, he said. "We should join the advertiser and

'5th network' plan courts Fox affiliates

By Marcy Magiera

Paramount Communications and MCA will try to launch a fifth national TV programming network in early 1991 by using the affiliate system established by the young fourth network, Fox Broadcasting Co.

But Fox isn't likely to let that happen without a fight.

Paramount Domestic Television and MCA TV have approached several of Fox's 129 affiliates about their proposed fifth network, known as Premier Program Service, and are expected to contact more affiliates, a Fox spokesman said.

Paramount wouldn't comment; MCA didn't return phone calls.

Paramount and MCA apparently plan to launch Premier with a Wednesday movie night and a two-hour block on Friday night, with situation comedies as probable programming.

Fox programs only Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights, but hopes to eventually expand its schedule to seven nights a week.

While participation by Fox affiliates would be crucial for Premier to reach the 70% of the country needed to attract national advertisers, Fox will undoubtedly fight the plan.

Fox President-Chief Operating Officer Jamie Kellner last week issued a terse statement saying, "We believe the partnership of Fox Broadcasting Co., its affiliates and advertisers is succeeding and will continue to grow as we complete our agenda, which is to program seven nights of prime time each week."

Peter Chernin, president of Fox Broadcasting Entertainment Group, said in a recent interview with Advertising Age that Fox is considering adding a movie night to its schedule next spring and a fourth night of series programming in the fall.

"If they have deep enough pockets, it could become a viable alternative," said Arnold Chase, VP-director of network operations, Bozell, New York. "They have the films and the capacity to make new product."

"If they can get a head start on clearances on nights where Fox isn't ensconced, they could be marginally successful as part of a shared fourth network. But if Premiere goes head-to-head with Fox, there's only room for one additional network on a seven-night basis," Mr. Chase said.

Paramount and MCA last month formed Premier Advertiser Sales, which accounts for about $250 million in combined ad sales in the 1988-89 season, or one in every five ad dollars spent in last year's barter syndication market.

The joint venture is the fifth-largest broker of TV advertising, behind the Big 3 networks and Fox. Fox tripled its upfront sales for the 1989-90 season to $300 million (AA, July 3).

Paramount and MCA, parent of Universal Pictures, also are venture partners in cable's USA Network and an international video distribution company. □

Louis-Dreyfus a signal of future Saatchi sale?

By Laurel Wentz

LONDON—Some Saatchi & Saatchi Co. watchers are speculating that the hiring of Robert Louis-Dreyfus as chief executive could be a step toward the eventual sale of the holding company.

"Many of us believe that the Saatchis ultimately want to sell out, and that's why a new financial person was brought in," said a source within WPP Group.

"The key question is, who forced Mr. Louis-Dreyfus on the Saatchis?"

Maurice and Charles Saatchi have proclaimed their commitment to turning around the troubled company, and if cost-cutting and reorganization efforts are successful, that could make Saatchi an attractive buy, sources said.

In its press release announcing his appointment, Saatchi emphasized that Mr. Louis-Dreyfus improved U.S. research company IMS International's financial performance so much as its chief executive that it was sold to Dun & Bradstreet for $1.7 billion.

Even if he's not that successful at Saatchi, sources said, a sellout could be likely.

"The feeling is Maurice and Charles are fed up and can't stand the continued pain," said one Saatchi watcher. "If it is beyond repair, then they could look to a buyer who would let them exit with honor and dignity, keeping a salary and a title like life president or honorary chairman."

Some Saatchi observers are wondering whether the brothers are losing interest in the business.

One sign is that the Saatchis are making personal investments in small but acquisitive businesses. They acquired 30% of leisure group Ex-lands here in April and 25% of Commercial & Retail Investments, a private investment company owning 20% of a radio and optical components marketer, in September.

They also sold their 20.5% stake in an earlier investment, packaging company NMC, for a profit of about $16 million.

Maurice also backs theatrical plays and Charles, after years of building up one of the most extensive modern art collections, has in the past year sold about 70 works of art, estimated at 10% to 12% of his collection.

NEWS ANALYSIS

The sale apparently is the result of his divorce from Doris Saatchi, with whom he built the collection.

Charles Saatchi's current companion, Kay Hartenstein, is a U.S. magazine executive turned London art dealer who last year was awarded a 10 out of 10 "bikini rating" by Conde Nast's British Tatler.

Ms. Hartenstein, 37, formerly was with Conde Nast Publications in New York and London.

It's unclear whether the Saatchis are trying to squelch or foster speculation the company is for sale.

Immediately after Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide Chairman-CEO Carl Spielvogel publicized his latest offer to Charles to buy some or all of the Saatchi agency business, reports appeared in the U.S. and U.K. of possible plans for a Saatchi led management buyout.

Sunday Times Deputy Editor Ivan Fallon, semiofficial biographer of the Saatchis and author of "The Brothers," drew on his Saatchi sources last week to assure Sunday Times readers the Saatchis are convinced a hostile takeover is impossible.

The next day The Wall Street Journal also carried a Saatchi management-buyout story, citing a source close to the company.

The financial community, however, thinks a Saatchi-led management buyout is a hollow threat.

"I just do not believe it," one analyst said. "Everything points to a reduced financial commitment [by the Saatchis]."

The Saatchis have virtually no equity base from which to mount a buyback, another analyst said. They own only about 2.5% of the company, and Saatchi personnel own less than 5%.

Others are skeptical that the Saatchis secretly want out.

Interpublic Group of Cos. Chairman-CEO Phil Geier said, "I hope they straighten out the agency for the good of the industry. I don't think they are backing away from the agency business."

Last week, analysts for the fourth time slashed Saatchi's pretax profit forecasts for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, to be reported in December.

Analysts lopped another $15 million to $30 million off pre-tax profits estimates, and most yearend forecasts now range from $80 million to $96 million. □

'Fortune' laps 'Forbes' in latest PIB ranking

By Scott Donaton

Time Warner's surging Fortune magazine has moved ahead of arch-rival Forbes in ad linage, according to Publishers Information Bureau figures.

Fortune's ad pages rose 19.2% to 2,556.3 for the first nine months, compared with the same period last year, PIB figures show. The gain moves the business magazine into third place among all consumer magazines tracked by PIB.

Forbes' ad pages also rose during the period, to 2,371.7, for a 9.2% gain, while Business Week's reached 3,098.9, a 4.3% jump over the same period last year.

Overall, Time Warner's magazines continued to turn in strong ad performances through the first three quarters of 1989.

Aided in part by the success of "Max-Plan," Time Warner's discount ad package, People ranked second among all titles with 2,661.5 ad pages, a 6.3% jump.

Time's flagship magazine also continued its surge, carrying 1,850.8 ad pages, a 9.5% jump.

Rival newsweeklies weren't as strong. Newsweek was down 3.2% to 1,620.2, while U.S. News & World Report posted a modest 5.4% increase to 1,331.7.

Venture, the magazine for entrepreneurs, ceased publication after its ad pages for the first nine months plummeted 38.5% to 281.9.

TV Guide, whose ad pages had dipped 7.6% to 1,606.5 for the first six months of the year, rebounded during the summer. The magazine carried 2,413.4 pages through the first nine months, a 2.4% increase over the previous year.

Women's service magazines—the Seven Sisters—continued their comeback from last year's poor showing. Family Circle, showing new strength under Editor in Chief Jacqueline Leo, led the pack with 1,449.9 ad pages, an 11.6% increase.

All but one of the "Sisters" posted gains. Redbook's pages fell 2.1% to 867.8. Woman's Day carried 1,203.5 pages, an increase of 8.9%, and Ladies' Home Journal's pages jumped 18.6% to 1,123.7.

Increased competition among the women's fashion magazines kept growth slow in that category.

Leader Vogue's pages rose just 1.3% to 2,431.6. Elle, whose gains have slowed this year partially as a result of the launch of Mirabella, was flat with 1,596.9 pages, only a 0.4% gain. Harper's Bazaar was up 2.1% to 1,067.4 ad pages.

Among national Sunday magazines, Parade posted a 3.9% increase to 510.2 ad pages, while rival USA Weekend's pages rose 7.5% to 449.8. □

Y&R's Klein steps aside

NEW YORK—Arthur Klein has stepped aside temporarily as president of Young & Rubicam's New York office in the wake of his indictment in the Jamaica tourism case (AA, Oct. 9).

The agency said Mr. Klein will work with Y&R Chairman-CEO Alex Kroll on joint ventures and acquisitions as time allows while he defends himself against federal bribery and racketeering charges in the coming months.

The defendants, including Y&R, have pleaded innocent. Until Mr. Klein can return, his responsibilities for the New York office and Y&R's direct-marketing and promotion units will be assumed by Y&R President Peter Georgescu.

At the same time, Steven McKenna, who faces perjury charges in the Jamaica case, has been transferred to Y&R's finance department from his job as chief financial officer of Wunderman Worldwide.

McElligott to Chiat shop?

VENICE, Calif.—Tom McElligott, founder and former creative director of Fallon McElligott, Minneapolis, is in negotiations for a job at Chiat/Day/-Mojo, sources said.

Last week, Chiat lost its New York creative director, Bill Hamilton, to Ogilvy & Mather (see story on Page 3). Chiat President-Executive Creative Director Lee Clow would neither confirm nor deny the talks, but both he and agency Chairman Jay Chiat are said to be friendly with Mr. McElligott. "He would be right for any job," Mr. Clow said. "He's a tremendous talent." Mr. Clow said he's considering a number of options in the New York creative department, including promotions from within and a transfer of Venice-based VP-Associate Creative Director Michael Smith to New York.

Mr. McElligott couldn't be reached for comment, but a source close to him said he didn't think he'd made up his mind yet.

Mr. McElligott left Fallon McElligott in 1988 after spending time in an alcohol rehabilitation program. His contract with Scali, McCabe, Sloves, which acquired a majority of Fallon in 1986, contains a non-compete clause that won't expire until next February.

Media buyer eyes U.S.

France's Carat considers buyout or affiliation

By Peter S. Green

Paris-based Carat Holding, Europe's No. 1 media-buying group, will enter the U.S. by the first quarter of 1991, says Eurocom President Alain de Pouzilhac.

Carat will either acquire an existing U.S. media-buying company or affiliate with one, he said.

Eurocom is a major shareholder of WCRS Group, Carat's owner, and a major Carat client via its new international agency network, Eurocom WCRS Della Femina Ball, or EWDB.

Mr. de Pouzilhac said that in the U.S. Carat will offer space-buying and media-study services, and that all space buying and related activities of EWDB's U.S. agency, Della Femina, McNamee WCRS, will pass through Carat.

He said HDM may also work with Carat in the U.S. "We'll discuss it with Young & Rubicam and Dentsu," he said, referring to Eurocom's two partners in HDM.

A. de Pouzilhac

The media-buying and advertising agency operations of Eurocom and WCRS Group are being realigned through a complicated exchange of cash and holdings (AA, Oct. 23).

Carat becomes 100%-owned by WCRS Group, London, which reduced its interest in advertising by selling WCRS Advertising Worldwide to Eurocom.

Eurocom, by buying 14.99% of WCRS Group, becomes one of its two biggest shareholders, along with Carat founders Gilbert and Francis Gross, who together own 14.99%.

The French agency is forming Eurocom WCRS Della Femina Ball as its major network by combining most of its agency holdings. (HDM will continue as a second network.)

Bartering, sponsoring and other TV-related ventures will be an important part of Carat's U.S. strategy, Mr. de Pouzilhac said.

"We have a very clear intention not to limit ourselves to space buying and to go into bartering and sponsoring both in the U.S. market and in the European market,"

Interpublic's Marion Harper dead at 73

Adman pioneered network concept

By Fred Danzig

Marion Harper Jr. died of a heart attack Oct. 25 at his home in his native Oklahoma City, where he chose to live as a virtual recluse for the past 20 years. He was 73.

Funeral arrangements call for a private service. His former associates are planning a memorial service in New York at a later date.

Mr. Harper had, before his 40th year, begun planning for what became the Interpublic Group of Cos., the advertising industry's first globe-girdling marketing communications network.

With his considerable energy and talents as a salesman and motivator, plus his buoyant optimism, he saw his dream come true. "Trust your hopes, not your fears," was his rallying cry. Mr. Harper constantly presented his associates with new research techniques and theories as he challenged them to penetrate the human psyche in the cause of building sales for clients.

He achieved great wealth and worldwide recognition as the leader of McCann-Erickson. He was known as an advertising innovator and visionary, who not only introduced new methods of research, but initiated target marketing, and, more notably, the Interpublic concept of parallel agencies and agency networks to serve competing clients.

But over time, Mr. Harper's inability to cope with skyrocketing overhead brought

Ad community tries to shake off quake

By Alice Z. Cuneo

SAN FRANCISCO—Bay area ad agencies have power, phone service and books back on shelves following the Oct. 17 earthquake, but psychological aftershocks, as well as commuter problems, have prevented a return to business as usual.

"It's hard to get your mind set on the meaningful pursuit of great advertising when you've been through a life-threatening situation," said Dennis Wilkinson, president of DDB Needham Worldwide's office here.

■ Future of Four A's Western regional meeting unsure—Page 73.

"Things are not back to normal," he said. "If you walk down streets and talk to people and to clients, it's very different than it was."

"The productivity is not there; people are jumpy," said Agnieszka Winkler, president of Winkler McManus, who added that others often are startled by something as minor as someone running down the hall and shaking floorboards.

"There is very definitely some trauma" among Saatchi & Saatchi DFS/Pacific's 120 employees, said Ron Colnett, chairman-ceo.

"Some folks don't feel very comfortable in the building because it is not up to earthquake code," he said, though building owners report it didn't suffer structural damage during the quake.

To accommodate closure of the Bay Bridge, one of the area's main thoroughfares, many offices have instituted flex time, resulting in a jumble of schedules, with one department working from 7 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and others starting at 9:30 a.m. and working later.

"Not everybody is here at 9 a.m. for meetings," Mr. Wilkinson said.

When Chairman-Creative Director Jef Loeb returned to his office at Katsin/Loeb & Partners, he discovered a crack so wide he could see through the wall. The city promptly condemned the structure.

That didn't bother President Daniel Katsin, who'd been coordinating the agency's move to a different building. Then the new landlord called: The new space had been condemned as well.

"Our objective is to make this disruption as invisible as possible. We're not going to miss one deadline. It's just another Katsin/Loeb challenge," said Mr. Katsin, whose car telephone became the office phone for a time. Since Oct. 17, work has been produced for several of the $9 million agency's clients, including Cellular One.

"I provide coffee and doughnuts. I'm hostess, maid, receptionist and art director. My cat serves as a paperweight."

The principals are working from Mr. Loeb's apartment; daily staff meetings are held in the home of Senior Art Director Pam Levinson.

"I provide coffee and doughnuts. I'm hostess, maid, receptionist and art director. My cat serves as a paperweight," she said.

Foote, Cone & Belding's San Francisco office welcomed back workers Oct. 23 with a breakfast buffet, including balloons and bright posters.

"It was very therapeutic. It allowed our 300 employees to talk about what they went through," said Exec VP-General Manager Jack Balousek, who was on the Bay Bridge at the time a section of it collapsed.

Fred Goldberg, president-ceo of Chiat/Day/Mojo, said he was assured damage to his office on Maiden Lane wasn't structural. But on rainy days following the quake, he was mopping up water. "When water comes in through a crack in the building, you wonder whether it's just surface damage," he said.

Two Chiat/Day/Mojo employees, among the more than 12 agency employees left homeless in San Francisco's Marina District, have taken up residence in suites on the penthouse floor of the building, a space often used as a northern California headquarters for Chairman Jay Chiat.

Many of the city's agencies have offered different forms of assistance to employees left homeless by quake damage.

Separately, J. Walter Thompson USA was among the San Francisco agencies that have rented apartments in the city for employees who attend evening meetings and would be getting home late and would face commuting problems the next day.

JWT also plans to designate employees' homes in the city as safe houses for workers who might be stranded by the next quake. The homes will be equipped with blankets, flashlights and emergency supplies.

"My favorite haunts, restaurants and clothing stores have been condemned," said Renate Witt, an executive assistant at McCann-Erickson Worldwide. "And they've put dynamite charges [in preparation for demolition] in a building across the street which moved 6 inches off the foundation.

"Other than that, things are as busy as ever." □

AT&T punches back

Countersuit charges MCI with false ad claims

By Kate Fitzgerald

AT&T Co. last week countersued MCI Communications Corp. for alleged "false and deceptive" advertising in what may be a landmark case.

The top two long-distance phone marketers are accusing one another of making deceptive claims about each other's prices, quality and service in TV and print ads earlier this year.

MCI fired the first volley in a complaint filed in U.S. District Court in Washington (AA, Oct. 16).

Last week, AT&T asked the same court to dismiss MCI's lawsuit and accused MCI of making similarly misleading claims.

N W Ayer, New York, is AT&T's agency; Wells, Rich, Greene handles MCI.

Both marketers have cited violations of the Lanham Act in the lawsuits, and both parties are seeking the same relief, including:

- A preliminary injunction forbidding the other from making additional false or deceptive ad claims.
- A court order requiring future MCI or AT&T ads to correct past deceptive claims.
- Award of all profits wrongfully amassed through deceptive advertising.
- Three times the damages sustained as a result of the other's deceptive advertising and court costs.

An MCI attorney said the case will "almost certainly" go to trial and will further define limits in comparative advertising.

Financial penalties in such cases can be enormous. In 1984, U-Haul International won a $40 million judgment against rival Jartran as compensation for deceptive claims; in 1989, Grand Metropolitan's Alpo Petfoods won a $10.4 million judgment against Ralston Purina Co.

"In effect, this will settle a lot of the disputes consumers have seen between the two long-distance carriers, and it will probably also be one of the leading cases in terms of deciding comparative advertising cases," said Richard Leighton of Leighton & Regnery, lead counsel for MCI.

When announcing AT&T's counterclaim, AT&T Group Executive Victor A. [illegible]n said, "We would prefer to do our talking in the marketplace and not in court and not in name-calling. But MCI, for whom legal actions are just another marketing tool, has once again turned to the courts—this time to attack our reputation."

MCI said it will file an answer to AT&T's countersuit within the next two weeks.

On Oct. 29, AT&T broke a new corporate ad campaign that steers clear of comparative claims by profiling several small businesses.

Several new spots were set to break that night on the AT&T-sponsored ABC-TV special, "The Final Days," or elsewhere on the same day if that program were bumped by the World Series.

The new commercials included two 2½-minute spots to introduce the new campaign. □

Consistent spenders log big recall

By Scott Hume

Sometimes the tortoise beats the hare.

The 10 most-recalled advertised brands in September were, in descending order from No. 1: Coca-Cola, Chevrolet, Pepsi-Cola, Miller (including Miller, Miller Lite and Miller Genuine Draft), Budweiser and Bud Light, McDonald's, Ford, Toyota, Oldsmobile and (tied for No. 10) General Motors and want ads/classified ads.

With the exception of the generic classifieds, all of those are well-established and heavily advertised. In fact, seven of the advertisers in the September 1989 top 10 also were among the top 10 in the September 1988 adWatch survey.

Another attribute they share is that they get what is really "continuity" advertising, relying more on long-term media weight than distinctive, short-term creative approaches.

An exception might be Oldsmobile, which makes an infrequent appearance among the top 10 on the strength of a TV campaign featuring children of celebrities.

Overall, however, the top 10 isn't a list of "cutting-edge" advertising. This doesn't mean that surprising advertising never gets remembered: Wendy's "Where's the beef?" and the California raisins have proved an advertiser can vault into the top 10 without heavy spending. But the instances are rare.

Consider the fate of some recent major ad campaigns designed to cut through the proverbial clutter:

Infiniti: The subject of much discussion, introductory advertising for this new car line doesn't show the car. It's striking and mysterious.

But memorable? Of the 1,000 people surveyed in September, Infiniti's was the first advertising to come to mind for just one respondent.

Acura: Another new car campaign—with a $100 million budget. This one earned three mentions.

Levi Strauss & Co.: The premier jeans marketer, which has had some of the most respected and honored advertising, launched a big new campaign, and it gets top-of-mind recall from two respondents out of 1,000. Friskies cat food did better (three).

Diet Coke: Coca-Cola Co. teamed up with the National Football League for an ad and promotion campaign featuring players from each pro team. Two respondents mentioned it as the first advertising that came to mind for them last month.

It took only 10 or more mentions to place among the top 10 in recall.

What the results suggest is that the "clutter" advertisers must cut through is actually in consumers' minds, where many advertisers' brands and messages are firmly established—that in addition to clutter in the ad media.

AdWatch is a joint project of Advertising Age and the Gallup Organization. Ad awareness is measured by asking a nationally projectable sample of adults to name the first advertiser that comes to mind, overall and in several categories, from among all ads seen, heard or read in the prior 30 days.

Last month, 1,000 adults were polled by phone. The margin of error is plus or minus 3.1%.

Among items of interest in the September survey:

- Miller Brewing Co. ran a 16-month-long campaign for its Miller Lite in Texas, a campaign that culminated in a series of Miller-sponsored parties on Labor Day.

Given that localized effort, it's worth noting that 45% of the first mentions for Miller last month came from the South Central region. Miller was the fourth-most recalled advertiser nationally, but was No. 2 behind Coca-Cola in that region.

- Diet Coke received few mentions on the unaided question, but when respondents were asked which soft-drink advertising came to mind first, Diet Coke got 6.5% of first mentions, 2.6 points above its 3.9% share in August.

Pepsi-Cola was No. 1 with 35.3% of first mentions (vs. 35.8% in August); Coca-Cola was No. 2 with 33.9% (vs. 32.2%).

- Chevrolet ranked ahead of Ford in unaided awareness, but Ford remained the recall leader when respondents were asked which car/truck advertising first came to mind. But the race was close last month.

Sterling settles into a niche mode

By Raymond Serafin

Sterling Motor Cars is trimming its estimated $30 million ad budget at least temporarily as part of a five-year plan to become a full-fledged niche marketer.

Graham Morris, president of the importer, didn't detail how deep the cuts will go, but the reduction will basically come out of TV spending, where Sterling has emphasized spot and cable buys.

TV will get about 40% of the 1990 budget, compared with 70% in 1989, while print goes to 60% from 30%, Mr. Morris said.

Sterling's niche marketing strategy includes reintroducing at least one of several notable British car brands to the U.S. market by 1993 (AA, Oct. 23).

Sterling will have the pick of brands owned by British parent Rover Group, including Austin, Morris, Healey, MG, Triumph, Riley and Wolseley.

Mr. Morris said the car will be designed specifically for the U.S. market.

One possibility is that Sterling will bring out a car to take advantage of heightened interest in the two-seater segment because of the success of the Mazda Miata.

Ironically, the Miata is being marketed as a vehicle that's technologically updated but stylistically a romantic throwback to past British sports cars such as the MG.

"Miata has done a tremendous job of capitalizing on our heritage," Mr. Morris said, though he added that Sterling won't try to compete head-on with Miata.

Mr. Morris said Sterling's current agency, AC&R, New York, will handle the new nameplate.

"We've set ourselves the task of becoming a true niche marketer of luxury automobiles in the American market," Mr. Morris said.

The ad cuts come at a time when Sterling officials have decided to accept lower sales over the next year rather than prop up sales numbers with expensive incentives and low-profit fleet sales, Mr. Morris said.

Sales peaked at about 14,000 cars in 1987 and are expected to finish 1989 at about 6,000.

Mr. Morris foresees Sterling offering between two and four different platforms, each selling 4,000 to 5,000 units a year, by 1993.

The company will bring out a new coupe under the Sterling brand in 1992 as a new flagship and in the meantime will introduce a number of derivatives of its core 827 model. □
